UNFERMENTED GRAPE JUICE.

Prof. George C. Husman, in Farmers Bulletin No. 175, United States Department of Agriculture, tells how a refreshing and wholesome drink may be prepared and preserved for family use from the surplis grapes of the home vineyard.

Unfermented grape juice has no doubt been used ever since wine has been made from the grape. The following practical suggestions will enable housethe time of the fruit harvest, and thus nually lost through inability to pre-serve it in the fresh state. In this form it is a pleasant, wholesome drink and food well adapted to home use.

The grape contains 12 to 28 per cent of sugar, about 2 to 3 per cent of nitrosugar, about 2 to 3 per cent of hitro-geneous substances, and some tartaric and malic acids. The skins contain tannin, cream of tartar and coloring matter. The seeds contain tannin, starchy matters and fat. The stems contain tannin, diverse acids, and mu-cilaginous matter. The value of the juice made from any grape is deter-mined by the relative proportion and mined by the relative proportion and composition of these various parts. It is well known that grapes and other fruits when ripe have the invisible spores of various fund, yeasts (fer-ments), and bacteria adhering to their sking and stems. When dry these spores are inert, but after the grapes are crushed and the spores are immersed in the juice they become active and begin to multiply. If the juice is warm, the changes take place rapidly; if, on the other hand, it is cool, the change is slower. But in either case, if left alone, the organisms increase until the juice ferments. The most favorable temper-stare for fermentation is between 65 and 88 degrees Fabrenhelt. Cold checks but does not kill the ferment. This fermentation fermentation, now commonly called the elliptic yeast, changes the sugar in the grape to alcohol and carbonic acid gos, and is the leading factor in converting must into wine. Hence it will be readily seen that to keep grape juice sweet ermentation must be prevented, and to be sainble the product must be clear, bright and attractive.

When a liquid is heated to a sufficiently high temperature all organisms in it are killed. The degree of heat required, however, differs not only with the particular kind of organism, but also with the liquid in which it is held. Time is also a factor. An organism may not be killed if housed to a high tem. not be killed if heated to a high tem perature and quickly cooled. If, how ever, the temperature is kept at same high degree for some time, it is be killed. It must also be borne mind that fungi, including yeasts, e ist in the growing and the resto states, the latter being much more r their great resistance to heat when dry In this state they can be heated to 21. degrees Fahrenheit without being killed. The spores of the common mould are even more resistant. This should be well considered in sterillzing bottles and corks, which should be steamed to 240 degrees Fahrenheit for that krape juice can be safely sterilized at from 16 to 176 degrees Fahrenheit At this temperature the flavor is hard-ly changed, while at a temperature much above 200 degrees Fahrenheit it is The preliminary hearing of Arnold Young, on a charge of intimacy with a young girl, was held before Justice of the Peace Amena in this city yesterday afternoon and evening.

The uses of unfermented grape juice are many.
