AFTERNOON COSTUME IN CHIFFON VOILE

Pearl-gray chignon voile, with narrow entre-deux of gulfure mounted with tucked lousine in the same that as the voile, shows the full sleeve and the foot ruffe edged with a black velvet ribbon. The blouse is of the simplest, the shallow shoulder yoke extending over the sleeve almost to the elbow, where a very full ruffe falls to the wrist over and undersleeve of chignon. The skirt is shirred at the band, a full circular flounce applied at knee depth beneath a band of lace and tucking, and this finished with the velvet-edged foot ruffe. The feather boned girde shows two brette straps of the same ribbon velvet.

To the small checks, which have been in vogue for some time, the plaids have succeeded as a natural consequence. Brown and white are favored combinations, and the novel coat and skirt are in these colors, the plaid relieved with white cloth braided in brown and gold soutache. The Etou is semi-fitting, the deep belt of white ecru cleverly defining the waistline. The skirt is tucked in dart design over the hips, and at the knee a flounce is shirred, overlaid box panels defined with braid relieving the fulness at intervals. A deep facing of brown velvet on where the hem usually is makes the light-weight cloth stand out well around the ankles.
