Can Bright's Disease be Cared?

A gentleman connected with the press, who was threatened with the same disease and had heard of Mr. Edward's recovery, recently called upon him and gives the following account of his interview: To the question if he had really been as great a sufferer as represented, Mr. Edwards replied:

"Yes, I had Bright's Disease. My father and mother died with it. So did two of my brothers. It came on me slowly. I passed much albumen and many epithetical casts, which are the sure indications of the disease. For three years I was so prostrated as to be unable to attend to business. I was utterly exhausted. Not only was I not able to walk with comfort, but actually could not walk at all. I hardly averaged an hour's sleep in the twenty-four. Nearly all the while I suffered with severe neuralgic pain in my head and rheumatic pains in my joints. My digestion was miserable. 1 was nervous and continually disturbed. At the St. George hotel, where I lived, I found it impossible to take my meals at the table, for my nerves were in such a state that the rattling of the knives and forks distressed me and compelled me to leave the dining room.
