Doctor—"John, did Mrs. Green get the medicine I ordered?" Druggist's Clerk—"I guess so, for I saw craps on the door this morning."

A Michigan editor has just given up the sanctum for the pulpit. He thinks it is easier to fight the one devil at which a minister levels his arrows, than the thousands which an editor is obliged to contend with.

A sleepy Deacon, who sometimes engaged in popular games, hearing the minister use the words, "shuffle off this mortal coil," started up abruptly, rubbed his eyes and exclaimed: "Hold on there, it's my deal!"

Two irate cooks of New Orleans threw eggs at a policeman who endeavored to separate them, until he strongly resembled an omelet, and appeared disgusted in the eggstream.

"You'd better look out for your hoss' feet above here, mister," said a ragged boy to a Reading traveler. "Why?" said the gentleman, nervously, pulling up. "Cos there's a fork in the road there," was the candid reply.

No process is so fatal as that which would cast all men into one mould. Every human being is intended to have a character of his own, to be what no other is, to do what no other can do. Our common nature is to be unfolded in unbounded diversities. It is rich enough for infinite manifestations. It is to wear innumerable forms of beauty and glory.

Recently a South Bristol (Vermont) man beat his wife unmercifully, and a delegation of ladies waited upon him, gave him some wholesome advice and promised him further attentions if he ever repeated the offence. His answer was:

"I have read ancient and modern history and rode on a peddler's cart thirteen years, and I think I know something of human nature and when my wife ought to be whipped."

Hasty words, as the poor island shepherd bitterly proved, like random arrows, often hit a mark they never shot at; but even solemn slow ones, when shot at a venture, sometimes find "the joints of the harness." At Mull a messenger having requested a London clergyman to announce, "If Dr. — was among his audience he was urgently wanted," the clergyman added from sympathy, "and may God have mercy on the poor patient!" The doctor, in a rage, demanded and received an humble apology.

In all well regulated households, the father of the family exercises a watchful care over his children. He notes their various phases of temperament and dispositions, their hopes and fears; their anxieties and disappointments; their physical development and moral progress, and he becomes in a measure answerable in society for their good conduct. With the help of the mother, any youthful mind may be moulded into gentleness and obedience. Filial duty then becomes a pleasurable habit that is observed during life.

A heart that can feel for another.—"I give and bequeath to Mary my wife the sum o' one hundred pounds a year," said an old farmer. "Is that written down, measter?"—"Yes," replied the lawyer; but she is not so old; she may marry again. Won't you make any change in that case? Most people do."—"Ay, do they?" said the farmer—"well write again, and say, and if my wife marries again, I will give and bequeath to her the sum of two hundred pounds a year." "That'll do, won't it measter?" "Why, it's just doubling the sum she would have if she remained unmarried," said the lawyer. "It is generally the other way—the legacy is lessened if the widow marries again." "Ay," said the farmer, "but him as gets her'll deserve it."

Let parents talk much and talk well at home. A father who is habitually silent in his own house may be in many respects a wise man, but he is not wise in his silence. We sometimes see parents who are the life of every company they are in, but silent and uninteresting home among their children. If they have not mental activity and mental stores sufficient for both, let them first provide for their own household. It is better to instruct children and make them happy at home than it is to charm strangers or amuse friends. A silent home is a dull place for young people—a place from which they will escape if they can. They will talk or think of being "shut up" there, and the youth who does not love his home is in danger.
