THANKSGIVING DAY.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

At a meeting of poultry
In Farmer Brown's yard,
The peace of fat chickens
Was very much marred
By an elderly hen
In a tauntingly way
Making known the appointment
Of Thanksgiving day.

Said a crower, with spirit,
"You will please inform Brown
On Thanksgiving day
I shall not be in town."
"Ah, yes!" cried the peacock,
With a terrible yell,
"You'll be well dressed
At the City Hotel."

Said a slow-stepping hen,
"I'm poor as a rake,
I don't think Brown's patrons
My carcass will take."
"Oh, that will not clear you,"
Screamed a pert little chick,
"Old Brown saves the bones
For his servants to pick."

"Oh, dear," said a pullet,
"Our keeper I'll hate
While on this broad earth
I'm permitted to prate."
"Now don't be too smart,"
Quacked loudly a duck,
"You may yet hear his name,
'T would be just your luck;

For in a brick oven—
The hottest in town—
They surely will keep you
Until you are brown!"
Cried the pullet in anger,
"I don't see the pun,
They had better take you,—
You were never half-done."

"Stop! Stop!" said the gobbler,
"And cease your rude noise,
Here comes Farmer Brown
With his overgrown boys."
They all became quiet,
Save one foolish bird,
And she, like some women,
Would have the last word.

Brown, hearing her scolding,
The corner came round—
The very next moment
She was dead on the ground.
Thus ended the meeting
In as curilous way;
From beginning to end
'T was considered foul play.

THE GHOST OF RUSSIAN HILL.

A great deal has been written about the large trees, the magnificent scenery, and the vast gold fields of California. Even its mammoth vegetables and delicious mutton have had their honorable mention. In short, I do not know of much connected with the country that we are unacquainted with. There's one thing, however, that has not been told of within my knowledge—and that is a Californian ghost. The subject has at least the recommendation of rarity; and perhaps it may be found to possess some interest. For myself, I give no opinion upon the point—I could not at the time—but I will truthfully and faithfully record the story as it was said to happen, and was related to me by the poor woman whose belief at least could not be shaken in it, and over a portion of whose life it had exercised so strange an influence.

It was in the year 1854, and I was living at San Francisco. Chancing to need some one to assist me in doing some plain sewing, Mr. Evans, one of the merchants of the town, and a man whose character for benevolence was known far and wide, gave me the address of a Mrs. Addis. She was a superior person, quite a lady, he said, who had come to that country from her native land, America, and was reduced to live by her own exertions. He added that she had been recently very ill with nervous fever, was hardly strong enough yet for the harder work of washing—which she had before been taking in—and no doubt she would be glad of the lighter employment of sewing.

"Washing!" I exclaimed, "A superior person, quite a lady, and reduced to take in washing!"

"Ay," replied Mr. Evans, "and thankful to get it."

So one morning away I started for Mrs. Addis', climbing over the intervening sand hills that lay between St. Annis Valley and my more centrally situated home. The streets were not then cut through or paved as they are now, so the expedition was quite a pilgrimage, and I was tired before I reached the cottage of Mrs. Addis. I recognized it by the description Mr. Evans had given; a pretty white dwelling with green blinds, standing in a garden surrounded by a picket fence, with an ornamental porch, over which a green vine was beginning to trail. All looked fresh and new; and it appeared she had not long got into it.

A little girl of nine was playing outside with a boy of three; another child, a girl of perhaps six or so, sat wrapped in a shawl, watching them. She looked ill; and indeed there was a delicacy about them all. The moment they caught sight of me, all three evinced considerable alarm, and ran in-doors. In a minute the eldest came out again, sent by her mother. Blushing very much, she said I must please excuse her for running away, but she and her sister and brother were shy and not used to visitors. She was a gentle, pleasant-looking child, but in her face there lingered an expression as of some sudden fright, and I thought it must have been at me.

Mrs. Addis came to the door then. A pale, delicate-looking woman with a sweet face of suffering, and a refinement of manner that surprised me. It was next to impossible to believe that she could be doing the work of a common washerwoman. Alas! I had not then the experience I have acquired since, of what well-reared women may be reduced to by distress, when exiles in a foreign country.
