REMARKS

Ir there is any one thing in this world above another that I prize it is my liberty-liberty to speak, liberty to act, liberty to move among my fellows, discharging the duties and obligations of ille without regard to the frowns or favors of anybody in the world. I reoice in the lact that, so far as I am individually concerned, my faith in God and in His promises to us, His people, was never better than it is to-day. And although the dark cloud may hang over us, and the storm of opposition beat against us, I am as confident as I am that I stand before you that God will vindicate the rightousness of His Saints and bring them off conquerers in the end. So far as I am concerned I see but little cause for mourning. It is true that some of our brethren are serving out terms of imprisonment, but it is also true that they are thus afflicted not for wrongloing but for conscience sake; and they do not mourn, so why should we. If ithey or we should put on the garb of mourning it would not be because of any inflictions we that the state of the state may have to endure in consequence of cation presenting to the world a system our religious convictions, for such of government pronounced by statesthings we may expect, and have ex-pected; our cause of mourning would be and is in man's inhumanity to man, itudes of low test, short weight, alum or phosphate pewders.

were the same persons to teach the same things now. To me it has always appeared singular that there should be any reflecting honest-hearted person unable to beeve in the mission of Joseph Smith. We may take such men as Luther, Calvin and Wesley and other equally learned, who are recognized by all hristians as beacon lights, and yet notwithstanding their education and ability to act in the roles they so nobly played, not one of them nor any other orthodox Christian has been able to evolve a perfect system of Church government. Their productions are as a rope of sand, void of strength or spiritual force. The spiritual desires of men are not gratified to satisfy, their souls are not feel; it is the letter without the spirit, the body without the soul I do not say this by way of disparagement say this by way of disparagement to the names of these litustrious he-roes; they did their work and did it ernment. In later times, however, we find a boy without experience or edumen of eminence to be superior to anything known among men. Our or-ganization is admitted to be without a parallel; and this through a mere boy. But the fact is, he was not the author, neither did he ever claim its authorship; he was merely the honored in-strument under God to reveal it to and institute it among men. And aithough would cause a commotion in the earth, the press and the pulpit unite in denouncing him as a crazy fanatic and a vile imposter, his work challenges the admiration of the best thinkers of the age. The principles that he unfolded are in harmony with the scriptures and with reason; they are in harmony with true science and with the laws of the universe; and he has presented them clearly and distinctly so that none need misunderstand them. It is most singular that the intelligence of the 19th century can look upon this boy and pected such things, having been taught in my youth that such a condition of things would come. But while we may expect to be persecuted and hated of his labors are before the world and none can gainsay them. This is the tween work of the Divine Master, and Joseph Smith was His servant. When it is borne in mind that we believe in faith as the primary and fundamental principle of the Gospel; that we believe in working out our salvation with fear and trembling before the Lord, through keeping His commandments and observing the laws and ordinances which He has and ordinances which He has made known to us for our guidance, and which, when carried out, produce the fruits of continue onward and upward, gathercontinue onward and upward, gather-ing strength as it goes, until it shall at last fill the whole carth, as Daniel fore-

One may ask, Have you any feelings of hatred in your heart toward those who have been the means of introducing new truths into the world: and who is able to say, that history will not yet record the fact that the sons and daughters of our most bitter opponents have recognized the Latterday Saints as benefactors to the human family.

Who delight in personal graving you? If they were hungry, and it was in my power, I would feed them: I desire not to bear malice or hatred towards any of the children of my Heavenly Father. We must fight the battles of truth, with a desire for the ascendancy of truth, and not personal gratification, remembering that sonal gratification, remembering that those who oppose us are of the same great motive power by which all reformers have been actuated; it was faith that impelled us to gather to this good or evil which they may do while and, and it is faith, in connection with in the flesh. I hate the misdeeds of the knewledge we now possess, that inspires us to steadfastly and firmly move on in our work of redeeming the land, and building up towns and cities, and bringing order out of chaos. Thus, so far as the principle of faith is concerned, we do not differ from Christians generally, except in being more faction of any living being.

One of the most striking points of difference between the religion of the Latter-day Saints and that of other people is our belief in revelation. While in distant lands I have had joy in gazing upon the stars and stripes as they have floated on the breeze from the mast heads of American vessels, or wherever my eye has happened to see the flag of our country.
