General Emory replied that the action of the police was without his knowledge and was taken without a conference with him; that he has no opinion to express as to the act, but that if it was done by order of Governor Kellogg as governor of Louisiana, he should support it in accordance with an order received by him from Washington, to recognize Kellogg as governor of the State.

WASHINGTON, 7.—Judge Poland has addressed a letter to U. S. Treasurer Spinner, wherein he enclosed ten shares of Credit Mobilier stock, which Oakes Ames insists belongs to Judge Kelley, but which the Judge refuses to own, together with a certified check for $329 on the First National Bank of this city, drawn to Judge Poland's order, and signed by Kelley, the amount of dividends on the stock paid Kelley by Ames. In his letter to Treasurer Spinner, Judge Poland says he endorses the shares of stock and also the check in pursuance of an arrangement between Kelley and Ames. He requests Spinner to call upon Ames for the balance of the accrued dividends on the stock, which will amount to some four or five thousand. The Credit Mobilier shares are to be sold if Spinner can find a customer for them, and then the whole amount conveyed into the treasury. Ames told Kelley that he was a fool for handing the proceeds of his Credit Mobilier transactions over to Spinner. "If you don't want it," says Ames, "you ought to give it to the officers of the Union Pacific railroad; it belongs to them more than it does to the U. S." Upon the whole, however, Kelley thought the government had been swindled by the Credit Mobilier people, and he wanted to make restitution so far as he was concerned. Kelley left to-day for home, saying that he felt better now that he had made a clean breast of it. He proposes addressing a letter to his constituents, defending himself and explaining his connection with the Credit Mobilier.

The comptroller informed Ordway that he did not see how he could pay the money, the section under which this payment was claimed was so clumsily worded as to be liable to several constructions, and besides there were insuperable objections that the section did not specify the amount to be paid and made no appropriation for the purpose. Many members of Congress, hearing of this decision, and who have been waiting for their $5000, have left for home to-night.
