striking and smart. As skirts are usually ample and flaring, the effect is not at all too bold.

These brassieres fasten in various ways: Some with hooks and eyes, with a slender whalebone behind them; others, the most radical, lace in the front; some button in the back, while still others are held together by ribbons. They are of several lengths and heights, from the high-neck covering the corset nearly to the waist, to the draped kind that merely holds in the top of the corset and goes over the shoulder. They are sometimes plain, but more usually trimmed with lace and ribbon in pretty designs, and many women who are fastidious in their point use them entirely to the exclusion of any other corset cover of less perfect fit.

The corset cover and skirt in one has come to stay. The corset cover is a separate garment is seriously threatened by the chemise with a fitted skirt which is a becoming and useful piece of lingerie. It is considered more practical and convenient than the combination of three pieces, and is so attractive in nainsook, hand-embroidered, and edged with German Valenciennes or simply with buttoning that few women can resist it. The most satisfactory are those made in one and shaped and fitted to the waist, although those confined by a heading are prettier—but unless the figure is slender the former is preferable.

A garment of this description was pictured in a recent magazine, made without a waistline, the fine lengthwise tucks being deeper around the waist to control the fullness. From the round neck to the deep flounce ran four lines of Valenciennes insertion, two inches in width, and irregular medallions further adorned the waist portion. A horizontal row of the insertion headed the flounce, which was bordered with a generous frill of handsome edging and a wavy row of insertion. Medallions were also inserted in the flounce. Ribbon, beading and edging finished the neck and armholes of this bit of lingerie.

A reputable authority foretells that long kid gloves will be as scarce and as popular next spring as they have been this summer and autumn. In black, brown and white they will be in demand, but the manufacturers will find it impossible to fill all their orders. The gloves will go up in price, of course, and they will probably have to be of inferior quality. Tans and browns are sure to be very popular, but what will women do if they cannot obtain them?

The glove gather seems to be a useful adjunct to the long glove. Everyone knows how the loose wrists of long gloves annoy one by slipping down and showing a bare piece of arm—purple with cold in the damp autumn days mayhap. So the plain bands of elastic to match would seem to fill a want. Some of them are so elaborate as to be considered more the light of sleeve ornamentation than as supporters of the glove.

A good idea for this same purpose is shown in a spiral celluloid bracelet, which comes in various shades and widths. It will stretch and contract to fit any arm, and is easier to adjust than elastic, and can be more invisible.

A ribbon jumper makes a dainty addition to a young girl's wardrobe. They are to be found ready-made in novelty plaid and pompom, ribbons, or in black velvet, which is as pretty as any other over a lingerie or net shirtwaist. They are a sort of lattice with half-sleeves, and have a charming effect on a slim figure. By the aid of a jumper of the same material as the jumps—which is composed simply of straps—a three-piece suit can easily be made with little trouble and expense.

For those who dislike the taste of oil, the following salad dressing is very good: Mix together one teaspoonful each of salt, sugar and mustard, and one-half teaspoonful of white pepper; add the well-beaten yolks of two eggs, and stir until thoroughly mixed and smooth. Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in half a cupful of hot vinegar, and add it slowly to the eggs. Stir in gradually one cupful of sweet milk scalded, and mix all well together. Cook in a double boiler until thickened, but do not allow the dressing to boil or it will curdle. Let cool, then whip in the beaten whites of the eggs. Thin with a little cream when ready for use. Cover tightly, and put in the refrigerator. This is a delicious dressing for various kinds of salads.

If kerosene is spilled on carpets, books, or manuscripts, try removing it by sprinkling corn meal thickly over the article immediately. Renew frequently until the oil has been entirely absorbed.

POVERTY BRINGS PRINCE AND PRINCESS TO STAGE.

Driven by adversity which has followed them since their elopement three years ago the Prince and Princess de Broglie have been compelled to accept engagements in American vaudeville theaters. They are now appearing in eastern cities where the princess does a singing turn, while the prince, who is a good musician, directs the orchestra. The prince will be remembered as the beautiful American Estelle Alexander whose father was once a wealthy land owner in New Mexico.

The Prince de Broglie, father of the young prince, is now invoking the French courts to declare the marriage illegal.

In Women's World.

One of the results of the prevalence of Princess models of every kind is the invention of the brassiere. This garment is designed to give the long, unbroken line from the shoulder downward. A new Paris model of corset would have to be well fitted to be at all bearable. It began at the neck and finished five inches above the knees. Yet fashionable women admit to such suffering "pour etre belle," and the effect under a tight-fitting or slightly draped gown is undeniably

PLAIDS ARE EFFECTIVE.

A fetching little frock appealing to the conservative taste of the business woman is this semi-dressy model of a rich, dull-toned plaid in blue and brown. The skirt of walking length is a graceful accordion pleated model worn with a pretty little bodice made over a tight-fitting and fully boned corseted silk lining. There is a collar and shallow yoke of lace in ecru color and a yoke and vest trimming of blue broadcloth. The sleeves are cut with the blue cloth and frilled with cream net lace.
