ANOTHER month will settle things political in the United States for a time. In all probability the re-election of Grant will be accomplished within that ple in the next house smelt smoke. time. As over the election of Lincoln, the division of the Democracy in November is likely to throw the ruling power into the hands of the Republi-cans for another four years. What fur-row for the departed, and it is months ther divergence from the fundamental ther divergence from the fundamental principles of American government may be made in that time is not for us to say. But it cannot be denied that many fear that it will be much. If the same character as thoss which unfor-tunately exist in Utab, the departure from the Constitution and from the un-derlying principles of the government of this mation would be very great, so great that nobody would recog-nize that any republicanism or democracy existed in the political nize that any republicanism or democracy existed in the political condition, for it would be a sheer des-potism, with no laws but the dicta of the rulers, and the dicta of such rulers would be guided by no principle is almost the only one in this country on which steam power is used excitu-sively. The public at large, we have no doubt, would be glad to know which breeds are best, first, for eggs; second, for meat; and third, for eggs; second, for meat; and third, for both eggs and meat. If such information, of a trustworthy kind, could be presented concisely to the public, it would be acceptable, for, as of good butter, so of good eggs, the market is not likely to be eventocked.

all who practice it find that to be the case. It is sometimes almost as bad to make a mistake. If President Grant be re-elected, he will still have before him a powerful opposition, which he can not hope to crush, but which he may find it to his advantage to conciliate, and in or-der to concilitate it may be necessary to be very circumspeet in his official acder to conclitate it may be necessary to be very circumspect in his official ac-tions, not only towards powerful con-stituencies, but also towards those less powerful, for the reason that it is never safe to despise the day of small things, as we know not what a day may bring as we know not what a day may bring forth.
