our Indiana manufacturing establishments would thus be promoted. But those who advance this argument also say it will not do to progress too rapidly in the direction of free trade; that we must go slow because our protected industries cannot stand too rapid an advance. It would not be safe. Now my countrymen, if this plan of revenue economy is to be promotive of our manufacturing interests, why not open the gates and let us have the promised goods all at once? Is it that the philosophers think that the cry of prosperity will be so sweet and full that our laboring people cannot be allowed to drink it at one d aught? No my countrymen, this statement implies what these gentlemen know to be true.

Aluge Baggs acted as spokesman. After touching on the political issues, he concluded.

General Harrison:—By your noble utterances in behalf of the down-trod-

Know that none more than Irishmen, who are characterized by their deference for women, and whose women have so finely illustrated that which is pure in female character, will value this illustration of our good American system on home life. There are nations across the sea who are hungry for the American market. They are waiting with eager expectation for the adoption of the free trade policy by the United States. The English manufacturer is persuaded that an increased market for English goods in America is good for him. But I think it will be impossible to persuade the American producer or the American workingman that it is good for them. It is evident that social order and material prosperty are bound up in the preservation of our existing policy. I do not believe that a republic can live and prosper whose wage earners do not receive enough to make life controllable.
