

HIS FIRST EXPERIENCE.

LOVE'S YOUTHFUL DREAMS OPENED WITH TRAFFIC FORGIVEN.

He found her—very much, he thought he had never loved half so much before. And she? Well, she may have loved him; that he didn't know—the heart's secret.

His was the first time. Her hair was black, as ink; her skin was white, as milk; and her eyes—now brilliant they were. They seemed to look into his soul. And he wondered if she knew it.

He had never seen anything so satisfying to look at—so even in beauty. He had never before left his half-tasted on the place—so even at the country hotel. He had never before found it a task to close his eyes at night—so even when he had been alone with fever.

As for her, she looked upon him with favor; she would take his hand as they walked along the terrace, when the water spread further than she expected on the sand, she would cry: "Look not, Harry, look not!"

He promised he ought to be happy—there was no reason why he should not be; others in his position would have been.

As yet, it was well enough—until the 2 o'clock wagon from New York came in. Then she would be dressed in something wonderful, in blue and gold, or in grey and black, or in pink and white; and she would sit upon the front of the hotel and chat and gossip with the guests.

He sat by on the 1 of the piano with his hand-clattered feet on the railing.

She came to him. She was dressed for travel in a white gown with plaques of tulle on the front of the waist and with a black belt that could not, he knew, be fastened.

She took off her hand, and then she put it on his hand. He looked up at her face. He was to hear the rumble of the stage. Then he heard nothing but the rumble of the stage.

He was all alone, and he let his head drop forward on his hand, and he cried as though his heart would break.

For, after all, he was only 6 years old.—From "The New York Times."

THE NEW AIRSHIP.

THE STRANGE LOOKING CRAFT FLOATED IN A DREAMLIKE MANNER OVER YONKERS, WED. PM.

CHICAGO, Feb. 12.—The Tribune and the Chicago Herald have been given more than the present amount of the Poughkeepsie flying machine. The machine flies all right enough, but it also shows the fashion of a toy balloon, with a lifting force nearly as great as that possessed by the little red balloon boy.

In fact, the effect of one flight is enough to bring the whole of the ground from its lofty position near the ceiling of the big exhibition building on the lake front.

The public is invited to see the ship—upon payment of the small sum of 25 cents, to watch the queer-looking machine being hoisted and lowered into the air. It is not an airplane, but a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible.

The machine is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible. It is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible.

The machine is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible. It is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible.

The machine is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible. It is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible.

The machine is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible. It is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible.

The machine is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible. It is a dirigible, and it is not a balloon, but a dirigible.

consequence says that the big ship will be built. He says the company, a new, spacious, and comfortable one, will be built on the principle that will run the machine in successful operation.

The new dirigible, he says, is to be built in this city, to be built in this city, to be built in this city.

The new dirigible, he says, is to be built in this city, to be built in this city, to be built in this city.
