INDIANAPOLIS, 3.—Ex-Governor Hendricks addressed an audience of 2,000 persons for an hour and a half at Connersville, at the fair grounds. Hendricks' reception was very cordial. After repeating substantially the same speech delivered at Indianapolis last Saturday he closed as follows: "You know I have been several times a candidate, and once elected—once, yes twice. I have been before the people of Indiana more frequently than I desired. When I was elected Governor I did not want to be a candidate; when I was nominated for Vice-President before I did not want to be a candidate, but it is not necessary to talk about that now. [Cries of no.] I did not expect to be a candidate this time. [Cries of, but we wanted you.] I tell you your votes are the worst in the world. [Laughter, applause and cries of 'you will get them.'] That's what I want. Some people here said the candidate for Vice-President ought not to go about making speeches. Well, I speak to my equals, to men who have decided opinions, and I want them to say when they elect me this fall that the act which excluded me from the office to which I was elected before was an infamous outrage. The republicans believe it was. [Applause and cries 'we know it.'] I haven't found one person that was not perfectly satisfied on that subject, and they are becoming rapidly satisfied of another, and that is that I am going to be rewarded this fall. They tell you that in New York the Irish people are going against the democrats, and that the laboring men are not going for Cleveland and all that. It is not worth while to disturb your minds about that. The Irishman is a natural democrat. [Great applause and laughter.] I am not speaking of that in fun but I am speaking of it in earnest; he has breathed the breath of anxious desire for better government in his own country; when he comes here his sympathies are for a popular government, honestly and economically administered, and there has never been a time when the rights of foreigners had to be vindicated by this country that the democratic party did not stand by their rights. The Irishman and Democrat stand together. When I was defeated in my own district at Shelbyville, it was because I would not be a Know Nothing. If I had been willing to have been a Know Nothing and carry the Know Nothing vote, I would have done well enough, but I would not; I would have felt so mean for the balance of my life I couldn't stand it. [Applause and laughter.] It was impossible. Now, my fellow citizens, it is not necessary for me to appeal to you any further, as you have known me more or less for a good many years. If I am worthy of the high office the party has nominated me for, then I appeal to you for your support. Now I received a great honor in the convention that nominated me, such as very few men receive; it was the honor which I felt was extended to the people of my own State when they placed me in nomination. It happened to be a time when I did not know exactly what was going on in the convention, and I was not drunk either. [Laughter.] Then I could not refuse and did not desire to refuse it, but I am a candidate before you and I take off my hat and ask of the ladies and gentlemen their support. [Applause.]

CHICAGO, 3.—Gen. Butler arrived here this afternoon from Michigan. Owing to the fact that the train came at an unexpected hour, the committee to meet him was not at the depot. He proceeded to a hotel and spent the time till evening in consultation with his supporters on questions relating to the proposed fusion with the democrats on the electoral ticket in Illinois. The result has not transpired. About 3,000 people gathered in Battery D armory this evening for the purpose of listening to an address by Gen. Butler. He appeared shortly after 8 o'clock, and was received with cheers. He said: "Most of the people both in the republican and democratic parties were honest, and there were bad men in both. The Savior of mankind in choosing Twelve Apostles found one who had a devil and was a thief. The doings of the republican party of late had shown a more considerable number of corrupt men in it than formerly. The democratic and greenback parties within the past twenty-five years had had no chance to be tempted, and therefore it could not be known whether they were corrupt or not. The republican party had made a good record in saving the Union and freeing four millions of slaves. But that was a past record like that on a tombstone. The Democratic party made a good record under Jackson, and if Jackson were alive today he would vote for him with all his heart. At the last election something over eight million votes were cast; at the coming election there would be eleven million. The workingmen of the nation numbered sixteen millions, what was to prevent them from choosing the next President? If they voted with either of the old parties, or divided their votes between them, the workingmen's votes would be thrown away. The speaker was laboring to keep the other parties from succeeding in their scramble for office. If his hearers would vote for him their votes would not be thrown away. Even if they did not succeed in electing their candidate. Men were in the habit of coming to him and asking him if he really expected to be elected. His reply was he did not care. He was sent here to the Democratic convention to ask that body what it was going to do for the laboring men. It wouldn't promise to do anything, and he left it, and now he wanted the workingmen to vote together, no matter whether their candidate was elected or not. If they did this they would not have to ask the old parties at the next convention what they would do for the workingman. They would come to him and would ask what he wanted. The speaker then proceeded to speak of the demands which he had made at the democratic convention in behalf of labor, in a vein similar to that pursued by him in former speeches, and followed with similar references to the action of the tariff laws, and the importation of labor under contract. He then proceeded to speak of the labor agitation in Massachusetts, begun by him many years ago. They succeeded in electing nine men to the State Legislature when nobody thought they could do anything; all thought they were throwing away their votes, but those nine men controlled the legislation of the State and reduced the hours of labor to the basis which exists to-day. A union of the laboring men of the little town of Lowell made possible the election of the great Charles Sumner. He would have it a criminal offence for any one to make a man work more than sixty hours a week. Eight hours as a day's labor was an experiment. Congress passed a law making eight hours a day's labor for the government. This was intended to prove the question whether a man can do as much work in eight hours as he could do in ten. From that day to this, he said, the republican party had not had the manliness or stamina to enforce it. He advised his hearers not to get up expensive ratification meetings. The workingmen did not need a brass band to vote by; he hoped they would not dress themselves in uniforms as anybody's guards and make monkeys of themselves. No honest man need any guards. He was at the head of this movement and would see to how its interests were pushed forward. It had been charged that he was doing this that he might be somebody else's secretary of the treasury. What did he want of a secretaryship? He had secretaries of his own, some of them capable of filling cabinet positions. In this movement he had simply and only the good of the workingmen in view. Gen. Butler excused himself from speaking further, saying his voice had been somewhat impaired by constant speaking and that he had further engagements.

WORCESTER, Mass., 3.—The Democratic State Convention was called to order by Gen. Collins, who congratulated the democratic party upon the certainty of success in November. Officers of the State committee were made temporary officers, and committees appointed; 22 cities and 35 towns are represented by 1,600 delegates. J. H. French is the permanent chairman.

An informal vote was taken for governor. The chairman stated that as a package of votes had been found so closely together they must have been cast by mistake. Col. Haggitt said the Chair had designated as a "mistake" the bunch of ballots found by the committee, but every one knew what such "mistakes" meant in a political convention. A formal ballot was then ordered and the delegates requested to pass over the stage and deposit their vote. On this formal ballot Wm. C. Endicott was nominated for governor, receiving 885 votes, of 721 cast, or four votes more than necessary to a choice. The nomination was made unanimous and the ticket completed as follows: Lieutenant Governor, James S. Grinnell; Secretary of State, Jeremiah Crowley; Treasurer and Receiver General, Charles Marsh; Auditor, John Hopkins; Attorney Gen., John W. Cummings. The convention then adjourned. The platform adopted congratulates the party on the brilliant prospect of the restoration of an honest National Government through the election of Cleveland and Hendricks; declares unqualified approval of the National platform; calls for war taxes in the time of war, peace taxes in time of peace, with no vast surplus in the treasury to excite cupidity, or encourage extravagance; an American navy that shall not be a disgrace to the country and a jeer and byword amongst the nations of the earth; the restoration of our shipping so that the products of our industries may be borne in American bottoms under the Stars and Stripes. The nomination of Blaine, according to the platform, is a cause of humiliation; the nomination of Cleveland a cause of satisfaction, and the nomination of Hendricks a cause for congratulation. The rights of labor and extended suffrage are also advocated.

NEW YORK, 3.—On the arrival of the Pacific Mail steamer at quarantine, Frank Frinsee, ex-clerk in the First National Bank at Portland, Oregon, and charged with stealing from the bank $7,500 deposited by the Northern Pacific railroad, who was a passenger, was arrested. He has made a confession, saying his brother some time ago persuaded him to invest in the Montana mine; he was then in the hosiery business in this city. He went to Montana and was made president of the mining company. Mining did not pay, and he went to Portland. Soon after he was employed in the First National Bank as exchange clerk; his salary did not suffice to keep him and he helped himself to deposits made by the Oregon Division of the Northern Pacific Railroad company, of which he had charge. He regularly abstracted some portion of the contents of packages of bills from station agents and conductors which passed through his hands. He continued stealing, and when found out he had taken more than he could repay, and he ran away with what was left. He went with his family to San Francisco on a sailing vessel and then took passage on the Pacific Mail line for this city. Afterwards he got tickets for Paris, thinking to throw the police off his track. He said he did not know how much he had taken. A small portion of the money was found in his possession. Detectives left for Albany to-day to get the necessary papers to take the prisoner to Oregon.

SCRANTON, 3.—Screams from a girl issuing from the woods near the Catholic cemetery at Hyde Park, attracted the attention of the sexton, Thomas Reed. He ran to the spot and found a man assaulting a woman. The man attempted to draw a pistol and was shot fatally by Reed, bespattering the girl with blood. Reed surrendered.

LEXINGTON, Ky., 3.—A woman named Mrs. Mary Ellison was shot and killed by Col. Wm. M. Walls to-night for harboring his drunken wife. Mrs. Ellison's husband was slightly wounded.

CHICAGO, 3.—The Inter-Ocean's Joliet special says: A riot occurred at the wire drawing mills this afternoon on account of a reduction in wages, said to be caused by competition in the State penitentiary. Part of the men remained at work, and the strikers attacked them. A considerable number, including the chief of police, were seriously though not fatally hurt. Most of the attacking party were arrested and fined.

BUFFALO, 3.—The American hotel at Port Erie was burned to-night.

KANSAS CITY, 3.—The new freight house for the Santa Fe Railroad in West Kansas City, nearly completed, was burned to-night; loss $50,000. The loss falls on the contractors, Billingsley and Skunk, of Topeka; no insurance. It was caused by a watchman overturning a lamp.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., 3.—Gen. Hamilton to-day issued a proclamation based upon the report of the State Veterinarian, upon the existence of pleuro-pneumonia. The proclamation includes the county of Fairfield in Connecticut, the counties of Putnam and West Chester, New York, the counties Lehigh, Bucks, Berks, Montgomery, Philadelphia, Delaware, Chester, Lancaster, York, Adams and Cumberland in Pennsylvania, all the counties in the States of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia; Miami county in Ohio, prohibiting the importation of cattle from any of these localities. Gov. Hamilton is also in correspondence with Gov. Porter of Indiana re-
