

Supreme Court Decision in the Thiele
Case—Wilson Gets Four Years
Other Business.

As this point Mr. Hamilton, of Leidenham's counsel, interrupted, claiming the court's attention to his discommodious manner of talking. Mr. Hamilton said he had been surprised at the verdict in view of the testimony. Wilson had been called upon up to the time of this trouble, and counsel wished the court to take it into consideration and extend leniency to him.

Wilson was ordered to stand up again. His counsel referred to the defendant's former good character and his innocent state of mind at the time of his guilty act of insanity. "I was well informed," he said, "of these facts; the court would give him the full penalty ten years. In view of his former character and his domestic life, the court would be lenient and would . . ."
