desire he accomplished a short time before his death.

In the summer of 1887, when deceased was 15 years of age, he went to Sanpete and served in the Black Hawk Indian war. At the age of 20, in 1889, he took upon himself the most responsible duty of manhood of securing a wife in the person of Elizabeth Chason, who has been faithfully by him in life's strenuous battles. Their union has been blessed with seven sons and two daughters, the mother and all but one son now live, to mourn the loss of a beloved father and husband.

Among laborers that stand as a credit to his name are the faithfully discharged duties of a two years' mission to the Southern States—1888-90. When, in 1891, the Payson ward was divided, he was chosen as a counselor to Bishop J. S. Pajo, Jr., of the Second ward. Then, in 1894, at the organization of the Nebo stake, when Bishop J. S. Pajo, Jr., was chosen president, Henry was selected as a High Councilman of the stake, and held that position until he moved to Canada, where he became Raymond's first overseer.

He and his immediate family, deceased is survived by seven brothers and sisters, four of whom are in Payson and three in Raymond, Canada. John B. Fairbanks, the artist, is one of his brothers. Deceased was born in Salt Lake City, March 20, 1849, and moved to Payson in an early day. His father, John B. Fairbanks, was Bishop of Payson ward for a long period in its early history.

A wise home life, growing out of a wise heart, leads naturally into humane sentiment and into religious feeling.

From the model schoolhouse diseases are excluded. It is not the place to collect every communicable disorder, therefore to be spread throughout the community. This has too long been the permissible work of school life. Dr. Easton says: "In my youth I took five separate fevers and contagious diseases from contact in school life—this in my life. He adds that over half of his practice comes from school contagion. The old idea was that certain diseases, such as whooping cough, measles and scarlet fever, were part of the province of life, and the sooner they were had and over with the better. We do not believe this nowadays, and are ready to enforce disinfection and preventives.
