orden, Oct. 29 .- The police departset last night captured the three agars who on Wednesday night into the People's Co-operative meat Coalville and secured about $200 with of plunder. Sheriff Mair of Sumst county followed the burglars to Mergin, as before related, but there betraces of them were lost. The officers ermised, however, that the robbers contrued down the canyon to Ogden. Yeserday afternoon the officers arrestel Paul Moffett, a 17-year-old boy, who was suspected of being connected with the affair. After being in custody a Inte while he confessed and implicated Thomas Moore and J. B. Wilson, two tough characters who had been hanging around Ogden for some time past. Moffett said that the job was planned in Ogden Wednesday morning, and that the trio went up to Echo, riding the billed baggage. He claims to have remained in Echo while the others went to Coalville, broke into the store, removed about $200 worth of goods which they placed on a handcar and brought to Echo. They then threw the handcar over the bridge and were there rejoined by Moffett and the three brought the by Moffett and the three brought the punder to Ogden, stowing it away in an empty car which was headed this way. In Ogden they concealed it in an old ice house, where the police last right recovered it. Captain Brown with Officers Pender, Wilson, Chambers and Hutchins made the arrests. Deputy Each Wild will arrive today from

Costville and take the prisoners back to Sammit county. WORKINGMEN'S STORE TROUBLE. Lena Wynn,

THE STORY OF HALLOWE'EN

ฐภายนนนณีข แนนนนน แนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนนน

(Written for the Deservet News.) ALLOWFEN, or the Vigil of All Saints, is observed by the Episcopal. Catholic and Presbyterian churches as a day of prayer for all Saints and departed spirits.

The Celtic and Scotch nations called this feast day, Beltane, or Beltin. Bel, meaning god of light, and tin, of fire, Two large bonfires were built in close proximity between which the men, women and children passed, thinking the sacred or magic fire would ward off dekness and promote health.

Next, the cattle and all domestic ani-mals were driven between the walls of fire, sometimes with disastrous results.

Among the young people, even in the most civilized countries, Hallowe'en is looked forward to, as eagerly as Christ-mas, for to them it is a day when the fairies have their jubilee, and are very propilious to the favored ones. The elves, gnomes, and all the other sprites and hobgoblins, also have a holiday, and are very active in coining mischlef for the small boys. Human nature is inclined to be myth-al, even from early infancy, and so long as it affords innocent amusement for the young people, no harm is done. The sport of tearing off gates and de-stroying property, is rowdylsm, and ought to be stopped.

In the country, many years ago, while the girls were trying their fortunes, the young men were out with the elves. They would carry off wagon wheels and hang them on trees in the heart of the woods. Sometimes on-tree would be adorned after the fashion of a Christmas tree. There would be wagon and carriage wheels, plow shares and every conceivable object that would excite anger among the neighbors when it "turned up missing." The girls spent their time with the fairles. One custom was to set a dumb supper, and the man she was intended to marry, would eat it with her. If she spoke during the preparation and before midnight, the spell was broken and she would then have to seek some other charm of finding out her destiny. There was always an old "granny" in he neighborhood to whom the girls the neighborhood to whom went for information upon these subiccts.

One Hallowe'en some young girls went to see granny about setting a dumb supper, and to get her to tell a

"Years ago," said granny, "I knew a girl who was a most lovable creature. She had many admirers, and could have picked her choice from among the best, but her heart had never yet been pierced by Cupid's arrow. "One Hallowc'en she began fixing a dumb supper, for like most girls, she was remantic. In those days the cooking was all done on the wide hearth, before the large open fire-place. She made a large roll of bread and placed it before the fire to bake, then set the table. When she had finished this last task, she went out to the wood-yard to get more wood to replenish the fire, for the bread was not quite done. While she was out, a sailor lad passed by, and seeing the preparations for a damb sup-per, went in and looked about. He did not have time to stay and partake of the supper, so he stuck his bowie knife into the loaf before the fire, then left. The girl came in soon after, and saw the knife sticking in the bread. She pulled it out, and as she did so, blood oozed from the incision. She looked at the knife; it, also was stained with the blood. She was frightened almost to death, and broke the spell by scream-RICH COUNTY GRAIN YIELDS.

this way, using the names of three

The "egg" test is the most amusing. Before retiring on Hallowe'en night, two girls boll an egg until it is hard,a minutes being the time for boiling. This must be done in their room, or where no one will disturb their silence, for they must not speak, nor laugh for they must not speak, nor laugh aloud until the next morning. When the egg is done, they both take it out of the kettle—both holding the handle-of the ladle. They both hold the knlfe and cut the egg, shell and all, in half. Each girl takes a haif egg and removes the meat from the shell. They fill their half shell with table sait, and both est their part of the egg and sait. No matter how thirsty you become, you must not touch water. The shells must be destroyed, and the firls walk must be destroyed, and the girls walk backwards to the bed and get into bed backwards. During the night while they are asleep, they become exceed-ingly thirsty and the man whom they will marry, will appear in a dream and give them a drink of water, which will quench their thirst. If he gives clear water from a glass cup, helath and wealth will be the girl's lot; if from a tin cup or dipper, moderate circum-stances; if from a gourd, proverty, with just enough on which to exist, is the destiny. If the water is muddy, your married life will be full of trouble. 10 no one gives you a drink, you will live in single blessedness.

Two young girls fried their fortunes. Two young girls fried their fortunes In this way one Hallowe'en, and one of them got up at about 1 o'clock, re-marking that she was too thirsty to wait for any crazy man to get her a drink, and she would get it herself. The other, received the coveted water which quenched her thirst until after breakfast. Another "charm" is walking backwards down the cellar steps at mid-nighe, holding a lighted candle in one hand and a looking-glass in the other, before her face. Her future husband will peer over her shoulder and his re-flection will be seen in the glass.

It will be a brave, or foolish girl who will thus venture alone, at midnight, and walk backwards into a dark cel-lar. Foolish is the most appropriate word, for none but a foolish, sentimental girl will thus expose her nerves to such danger.

"One morning, when in his fiercest mood, he demanded the knife, which he said he had left in the loaf by the fire. She had never connected him with the knife, neither had she told him of the circumstances concerning it, so when he demanded it, she almost faint ed for the whole scene flashed before her,—the bloody knife and the blood trickling from the loaf. She could not move nor speak, for she was dumb with fright. Her silence so enraged her husband that he began searching for the knife. He ransacked bureau drawers, closets, and even ripped open the mattress. He was about giving up the search, when he stumbled against the old trunk and almost lost his balance. This made him more angry than ever. and seizing an ax, he broke the offending trunk to pieces, thus exposing the knife. He gave a sardonic laugh and grabbing the knife, buried it almost to the hilt in his wife's breast."
