

Desperate Bulgarian Sacrifices Himself For His Comrades.

"My brother was with the band," he said, halting in his English. "The Turks, to the number of 500, had them penned in in a cleft in the mountains. The cleft was like a slice out of a cheese. At the top it ran to nowhere—nothing at the higher end but walls of rock running always upward, smooth, as the walls of a mosque; a goat could not have climbed there; only a bird penned in could have escaped. See," he said, putting his hands together and extending the fingers anglewise, "that was the position. There was only one way out, and the Turks blocked that. They had driven the band in there by force of numbers. They came on, creeping from rock to rock, now crawling on their bellies, now rushing from one cover to another, but always advancing. It was when they rushed that the band gave them something to remember. Yard by yard the band fell back, and every bit of open ground was marked by dead or wounded Turks. Eh, what do you say? Brave? Oh, yes, the Turks are brave. Only fools who do not know them say they are not. If they were not brave fighters they would not be so dangerous. The men of the land were brave, too. One by one they had been dropping until only five and twenty were left, and nearly half of them were wounded. "There was one man there—a Bulgarian. He had been a comrade of mine in the service before he threw it up and joined the patriots to help beat the Turks. We do not speak of him openly, not often, but we drink a silent health to his memory always. We are proud of him, and we revere his name. It will go down in history, that name, the name of Sugaroff. He was always in the thick of the fighting, and his body was torn with wounds, yet none was in a fatal place. 'Courage, comrades!' that was his cry all the time. 'Don't waste a bullet. Shoot straight, for the Turks are many and the cartridges are few.' They did not lose heart, not even when the last cartridge was fired. They had fought side by side too often to be afraid to die together. Half way through the fight the brave Gen. Stojanoff fell dead, his body pierced by many wounds. He, too, was a Bulgarian, a man who did not know what fear was. They laid his body in the shadow of a rock, closed his eyes and folded his hands across his heart, and left him, fighting for every foot of ground as they fell back. Comrade after comrade dropped and died, yet no man among the little band spoke of surrender. The Macedonians meant to die as boldly as their Bulgarian leaders. Young Milef, who had only just passed through the Bulgarian military schools with distinction, dropped and died with a smile of defiance on his boyish face. He might have become great if he had lived, for nothing breathed that could daunt him. He had laughed as the night waxed hotter, laughed defiantly when the Turks had hemmed them in, and now his face lived with laughter even when the breath was out of his body and his soul was with God. The cartridges began to run out. Those who had six gave three to those who had none. Those who had but two gave one to a neighbor whose bandolier was empty. Not a shot was wasted. The Turks were too close for the bandmen to miss their aim. "Closer and closer the hated enemy came until patriot and oppressor could look easily into each other's eyes. The Turks kept firing steadily, but now the bandmen's rifles were silent. The last cartridge was spent; all that they had to hope for was five minutes of fierce fighting, hand to hand, mountaineer's knife against soldier's bayonet, and then death and mutilation and the burial that the culture gives. It was then my old-time comrade, the gay, light-headed Sugaroff, the man whose joyous jests had made our camp a fire ring with merriment, taught the cursed infidels how a Bulgarian soldier can die. They were waiting for the rush of the Turks, waiting with bared steel for the onslaught. They had smiled into each other's eyes like good comrades, and were ready for the worst. Then Sugaroff, lying behind his rock, spoke quickly: "I am wounded and nearly spent my brothers, but hear me. One must die, now or a little later does not matter. See! I have two bombs, one for each hand. In a moment the Turks will have crowded the pass. I shall leap among them and dash the bombs to earth and blow away a path for you. Charge when the stroke comes and win your way to freedom. Let those who like remember Sugaroff." With that he sprang from cover as though he had no wound, sprang upright, and rushing down the mountain pass was right among the astounded Turks before they seemed to know that he had moved. A hundred rifles pointed at him then. A hundred bayonets gleamed. "Turk pressed Turk to be in at the slaying, but no bullet reached Sugaroff, no bayonet touched him. Up went his arms in the sunlight, up above his head, then down again, and the bombs crashed on the rocks in the midst of the Turkish soldiery. A yell of "Allah!" broke from the tyrant lips, a great shout of wonder from the insurgent bands. Flame that made the sun look sickly leaped suddenly into being. Men were ripped and torn asunder as though the lightning of the storm had struck them. Rifles were bent and broken steel snapped like straw. Human bodies were wrenched asunder and limbs were strewn around the pass. A mighty gap was cut in the Turkish ranks. Terror fell upon those that did not fall, and before they could rally from the shock the remnant of the Macedonian band charged down and swept through them, striking fiercely to right and left as they passed, sending the steel home to the hilt in their onward rush for freedom. The path that Sugaroff had marked with his life blood was the path that led to safety, and they took it boldly and swiftly.

"And Sugaroff?" I asked. "What of him?"

The Old Men and Women Do Bless Him.

Thousands of people come or send every year to Dr. Bye for his Balm Oil to cure them of cancer or other malignant diseases. Out of this number, a great many very old people whose ages range from seventy to one hundred years on account of distance and infirmities of age, they send for home treatment. A free book is sent telling what they say of the treatment. Address DR. W. O. BYE, Drawer 1111, Kansas City, Mo. (If not afflicted, cut this out and send to some suffering one).

New Silks For The Art Needlework Section.

We have finally made arrangements to handle exclusively in this city Belding Bros', celebrated silks for art needle work. These silks are superior to all others on the market. They come in such delicate tints and blend so perfectly that the results accomplished are wonderful executions of art. The shades are prettier than those found in other silks and especially do they launder better.

High art needle work with its fascinating groupings of colorings and intricate and beautiful designs, seems at present to have a growing tendency in the woman's world. This beautiful work bids fair to be, not a fancy for a few seasons, but an art, which every woman can make a part of her accomplishments. As she becomes more familiar with the work her ideas expand which helps to give a finish to her embroidery, which at times almost rivals Nature itself for its correctness of color in leaf, flower and fruit. Women marvel at the small price at which a skein of silk is sold over the counters of the art section; at the slight expense necessary to become proficient in mastering the lessons; the ease with which a degree of perfection is attained.

Mrs. Leyson, who has supervision over the Art Needle Section, is teaching the new Japanese system. She gives free lessons from 3 to 5 o'clock on Monday, Wednesday and Friday; from 4 to 6 on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. The classes are large and the pupils are delighted with the progress they are making. This branch of the store promises to become very popular as Christmas approaches.

Buster Brown Novelty Suits.

Peculiar Style distinguishes the fashionable and perfectly tailored clothing for youths, boys and juveniles which we handle.

The makers have stood at the head of this branch of the high class clothing industry for almost a quarter of a century, and have never been approached for beauty and exclusiveness of styles, and superb tailoring.

DOUBLE FOX SCARFS.

This is a fine double scarf of Isabella Fox, two tails on the end, also four feet on the ends, $13.50 and also four feet on the ends, $15.00, for $9.75

NECKWEAR EXCELLENCE.

The increasing business which the section for neckwear for women is enjoying is gratifying. Women have begun to depend upon the section for latest ideas in these dainty accessories to their attire. Choicest creations are exhibited immediately following their appearance in fashion centers. The lines carried are expressions of the latest designs in neckwear and shown in such profusion as to render selections a pleasure.

Elegant lace collars are displayed as well as others in the new stole effects which are made of tinsel braids and silk rings while those beautiful Parisian ones, made so as to be applied as a trimming on the waist, will delight the neat dresser.

Never in the history of neckwear has such demands been made as at this time on designers and manufacturers for new inventions which needs be distinguished in each instance by exquisite and elaborate patterns, which is especially true of collar stocks and fancy lace jabots. During the season and throughout the winter the section will exhibit the newest conceptions in lace stocks to be worn with almost every waist or gown.

Sale of Remnants Of Embroideries And Insertions.
