the infirm, in search of a home where they could enjoy, without molestation, the faith they had embraced—admiration for their unwavering faith, admiration for the executive ability which has been exhibited by their leaders, especially by their chief, Brigham Young. If, as they fondly hoped might be the case, they had found a home where the "Gentiles" would hot have fellowed them, they might have been the founders of a nation; but they were in fact only the pioneers of that great tide of emigration which the discovery of gold in California put in motion. The railroad has made their pleas-ant places easily accessible. They embraced-admiration for their ant places easily accessible. They are no longer isolated. * Circumstances are solving the question of Mormonism, which nce seemed likely to become an embarrassing and serious one. If good judges and honest officials are sent to them, for the pretection of life and property, and they are left in other respects severely alone by the Federal Government, it will soon become as a "tale that has been told." The Mermons have done much good in their way. They have opened and improved a region which, but for them, would have been neglected. They have brought to the country many thousands of peaceable, in lustrious, and skillful people, and added largely to its wealth. Their history will afford abundant materials for philsophical speculation, but there is no danger of their being hereafter a political or a social disturbance. H. MCCULLOUGH.
