filed suit in the district court against the Lulu Mining company, to recover the sum of $$9.08, alleged to be balance due on a certain promisory note, ex-ecuted May 15, 1907.

of the supreme court of Utah, as de-fined in a decision rendered Saturday. The case at bar was that of Mrs. Jen-nie Larson against Salt Lake City, the Big Four Advertising company, and James Riley, in which plaintiff sought to recover damages in the sum of $3,000 for personal injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon her by a falling signboard near the Buffalo saloon, in 1907. Defendants asked for an order of the court that would subject Mrs. Larson to the ordeal mentioned, and upon her refusal to comply with the requirement, the case was dismissed. Judge Straup, who wrote the su-preme court's decision, says in part of the rulings of Michigan courts, which formed the principal basis for Judge Lewis' action in the local court: "The very courts, which assert the existence of power to submit to a physical examination, assert with equal emphasis that an order of the court that a veterinary surgeon may be sent onto the premises of a party against his will to examine a horse, whose condition is in dispute, is in ex-cess of the power of the court. Why, then, in such an instance, assert that compelling the plaintiff to allow a veterinary surgeon to enter his prem-ises to make a physical examination of his horse was an unauthorized in-vasion of his rights, but to compel a plaintiff, especially a woman, to allow a physician, and a stranger, against her will, to enter her home, and she be there compelled to lay bare her body and submit to his touch, and, if on her refusal, to submit to such a course, the doors of the courts be closed on her, is that not also an un-authorized invasion of her rights?" The case will be reroanded to the district court, where it will be de-termiend upon its merits, irrespective of whether or not plaintiff undergoes an examination. TO THE PUBLIC.
