

There are Not Too Many Good Lawyers

The legal profession is overcrowded—but not with good men. Criticisms of the legal profession, such as were made by President Taft in Chicago a while ago and have been made recently by other eminent jurists, are undoubtedly deserved.

The profession is overcrowded with men who have no business to be in it at all. But the fault does not lie with either the requirements for admission to the law schools or the length of the course of study. It would work as much hardship to demand that every law student be a college graduate, such requirements would have barred many of the best men we have from ever being admitted. Such men as Justice Gurnor and Justice Woodward would never have been permitted to begin the practice of law if there had been any such requirement.

What is absolutely essential, however, is a change in the attitude of the average law student, and for that matter the average lawyer, toward his profession. Hundreds of men take up the study of law each year with the object of becoming lawyers solely as a means of earning an easy livelihood or of securing advancement politically or socially. They look upon their profession merely as a means to an end. These men should never be admitted to the bar. Of them there are already far too many in the profession, and far and away too many now preparing themselves for admission. With them the legal profession is overcrowded. To this class of lawyer and embryo lawyer may be traced the desperate into which the legal fraternity has fallen. It is not fair to them to blame the law for the mistakes they have made. They are the ones who are responsible for the mistakes they have made. They are the ones who are responsible for the mistakes they have made.

log the standards of the legal profession as the best means of securing the highest requirements of law students and longer courses of study. None of these things are so far as to argue that the length of time required for study be made five years.

Neither course, however, would free the bar from the stigma under which it is now. Only the honest desire of the members of the profession to make themselves subservient to the law, and not the law subservient to them, will raise the profession to the heights from which it should have fallen. In the case of Richardson, Dean of Brooklyn Law School, St. Lawrence University, Foley's Honey and Tar cures coughs quickly, strengthens the lungs and warms the body. A Sale of Unusual Import

Over 600 of the New Tailor-Made Suits and the New Dresses at About 1/2 Price

Unusual and astounding as this statement may seem, it hardly conveys the true import nor does justice to the exceptional value and style feature of this Great Sale. How a certain Eastern Manufacturer, whose name we are not at liberty to disclose owing to the fact that he has recently sold to several Houses in this City, the very same styles at vastly more than we have paid—sacrificed his entire Stock to us at little more than 50c on the Dollar, is not of particular interest to you, but suffice to say that when this Sale opens Monday, it offers you untold advantages of securing the most beautiful SUITS AND DRESSES—models that embrace every style requirement AT ONE-HALF WHAT SUCH GARMENTS ARE NOW SELLING FOR IN SALT LAKE. WE HAVE DIVIDED THIS GREAT PURCHASE IN THREE LOTS.
