in the wilderness and converted the desert into a garden. During all his eventful and stormy life Brigham Young never lost his hold upon the love and devotion of the Mormon people. Whatever wrongs he may have committed, and cently, was taken before Chief Jus-tice Shaeffer, on a writ of habeas history will be false to truth and to if it should fail to record the fact that no man of his era did more for the material conquest of the continent than Brigham punished was committed in Davis Young. The maxim that enjoins Young. The maxim that enjoins us to say nothing but good of the dead is one which we have no re-luctance to follow in this meagre notice of the founder of Utah. We had great respect for Brigham Young, for his ability and for his work. But for his powerful helps and aids, the Pacific Railroad that now spans the continent and binds the Union, would not have been a national blessing in this century. This is our belief. And but for his prompt and powerful co-operation, the Union Pacific company would never have conquered Promontory Point as a basis for the adjustment of the final junction of the two roads at Ogden. We know Brigham Young through only a slight personal ac-quaintance, having met him only once on our second visit to Utah several years ago. In a long con-versation upon existing difficulties young men of this city, Jones and Hunter, were arrested on a charge of having been guilty of grossly im-moral conduct with a gitl about fourteen years of age, named Saw-yer.

When the young men were ar-rested they made some show of re-sistance to the officers.
