nd put upon its passage the bill ap-riating $5,000,000 for the continuation een appropriated by the bill last year.] Willis briefly explained that it had been thought best not to allow the present work of the government to go to waste and ruin on account of the lack of appropriation. For this rea-son he had, after consultation with a number of centlemen brought in a bill number of gentlemen; brought in a bill ppropriating $5,000,000, or one-seventh e amount which the corps of engineers had stated could be profitably xpended during the coming year. The bill was submitted as a compromise, because he knew a discussion of the regular bill would consume valuable time and might endanger the passage of other appropriation bills and cause an extra session.

Hiscock, cannon and others opposed the bill. Cannon said, during the course of his remarks, that last fall democratic orators had told the peobe at the helm, and how they came in and moved to pass this crude measure under suspension of the rules, for fear there might be an extra session March or April. In other words they feared to trust themselves. The bill was supported by O'Neill,

The Times says: It is impossible to say how far Randall's tactics in regard o the suspension of silver coinage o or do not represent the views of th

President-elect, but most likely the latter confined himself to approval of suspension, and left it to the leaders of the party in Congress to decide in what coinage, while two-thirds of the republicans favor suspension. It amounus to this: On a question of prime importance-the first that Cleve-land had thought proper to take posi-tion in the property of the prosition on-involving the policy of the party for a considerable period, President-elect finds himthe by two-thirds of his own party. But we are much mistaken in Cleveland if it shall give him a moment's uncasi-ness. If Cleveland is resolute in his deter-mination to pursue the right, he will receive aid on this and similar questions from republicans who hold the welfare of the country in supreme regard. They, with the sound men among the democrats, will constitute a working majority in both houses of Congress. We need such a redistribution upon a question of principle as this will be if it comes about. But why are the members of the present Congress so resolute in their opposi-tion to the suspension of this iniquit-ous and highly daugerous law? Is it possible the silver mine-owners have found it to their advantage to distri-bute a part of the plander the law gave them among the law-makers?
