

DRAMATIC AND LYRIC

The company to play at other big theaters often, in the summer of last year, the Tabernacle staff train, then on route to the World's Fair in Chicago, were invited by the famous name of West, Agnes, Johnson, Mrs. Stewart, Tom, Lewis, Kent, Philbin, German, Gordan, and Teeter, would go to New York to appear at the theater. They were invited because they did not encompass a stage over in Salt Lake, the capacity of accommodating being considered too great to justify such names between Chicago and New York. The tabernacle train, however, might well consider whether they cannot find some audience outside of the city, who are willing to see them, but there are only a few of those who make merit in this neighborhood.

The company is said to be enormous. The social orchestra is very popular by the attitude in which the beautiful songs are sung by such artists.

The Grand has entered a prosperous

A paragraph in the New York Mirror says the theater box offices are reflecting the prosperous conditions all over the country. This is entirely true in Salt Lake. When the hard times came on and the war enveloped Roger to see, the theaters were the first places to feel the effects. The attendance dropped down to a panic basis, and managers everywhere looked at each other in consternation. The opening of the season of 1898-9 found the war ended and the country rushing on toward good times, and the financial tide again began to rise in the box offices. Overlooking the general prosperity, however, have come the startling results of the past week in Salt Lake. Edwin May, "a man to fortune and to fame unknown," came along with a play which had been seen here before, and with which the memory of his father was fully identified, and not only squatted his father's crest, but went beyond them, of course Ada Dwyer's presence had much to do with the handsome receipts attained, but even her presence in the east could not have kept the record up to the figure record night after night but she has picked up another good hold in dramatic condition.

As for the artistic results, they have been fairly well maintained. Consider the statement that the company was not inferior to the either of the original acts, the main difference lying in the Chambers, played by a gentleman who is by no means an Arnold Daly, in the sequel of Mr. Edwards, who is as different from Frank Allen as star from dishonored, and the story of Miss Stevens, who has scarcely the personality to her that she has to form. Mrs. Ethel May, however, has held her own, although she is not equal to the young Miss May herself. Young May himself is a marvel as an actress. From first to last he was truly the "father" in his might to be lived, and for the brash voice with which he was compelled to play, there could have been nothing desired. Young May has got the parts, and does not carry the atmosphere, or to speak of his distinguished father, but with his astonishing ability to imitate his father's style, make up, and his expression, down to the minutest item of "nothing" in it, no saying what he has matched his father's.

Miss Dwyer received a welcome welcome of her talents and worth of the time which gave her birth. Her character was a singular one, and but few actresses could be found possessing the individuality necessary to portray it, at least as Frank May would have had it constructed. The sublime action of his act in adding to Miss Dwyer's success, 24 per cent of the receipts from the Salt Lake engagement, showed the estimation which the stars place in the services of his leading lady.

William H. West's big minuted reputation was made when he was a member of the firm of Primrose and West. Not long ago the old partners decided to split their fortunes and separate ways. Primrose, however, has now joined with Lee, Docthadar, and is now touring the country in '99, that noted comedian. The manager of the Salt Lake company, and from all accounts is more than duplicating the success of the old firm. The height of Mr. West's success is in the "Drama and Lyric."

The Grand has entered a large measure of the original acts, the main difference lying in the Chambers, played by a gentleman who is by no means an

Arnold Daly, in the sequel of Mr. Edwards, who is as different from Frank Allen as star from dishonored, and the story of Miss Stevens, who has scarcely the personality to her that she has to form.

Mrs. Ethel May, however, has held her own, although she is not equal to the young

Miss May herself. Young May himself is a marvel as an actress. From first to last he was truly the "father" in his might to be lived, and for the brash voice with which he was compelled to play, there could have been nothing desired. Young May has got the parts, and does not carry the atmosphere, or to speak of his distinguished father, but with his astonishing ability to imitate his father's style, make up, and his expression, down to the minutest item of "nothing" in it, no saying what he has matched his father's.

Miss Dwyer received a welcome welcome of her talents and worth of the time which gave her birth. Her character was a singular one, and but few actresses could be found possessing the individuality necessary to portray it, at least as Frank May would have had it constructed. The sublime action of his act in adding to Miss Dwyer's success,

24 per cent of the receipts from the Salt Lake engagement, showed the estimation which the stars place in the services of his leading lady.

William H. West's big minuted reputation was made when he was a member of the firm of Primrose and West.

Not long ago the old partners decided to split their fortunes and separate ways.

Primrose, however, has now joined with Lee, Docthadar, and is now touring the country in '99, that noted comedian. The manager of the Salt Lake company, and from all accounts is more than duplicating the success of the old firm. The height of Mr. West's success is in the "Drama and Lyric."

The Grand has entered a large measure

of the original acts, the main difference lying in the Chambers, played by a gentleman who is by no means an

Arnold Daly, in the sequel of Mr. Edwards,

who is as different from Frank Allen

as star from dishonored, and the story

of Miss Stevens, who has scarcely the

personality to her that she has to form.

Mrs. Ethel May, however, has held her

own, although she is not equal to the young

Miss May herself. Young May himself

is a marvel as an actress. From first to last he was truly the "father" in his might to be lived,

and for the brash voice with which he was compelled to play, there could have been nothing desired. Young May has got the parts, and does not carry the atmosphere, or to speak of his distinguished father, but with his astonishing ability to imitate his father's style, make up, and his expression, down to the minutest item of "nothing" in it, no saying what he has matched his father's.

Miss Dwyer received a welcome

welcome of her talents and worth of the

time which gave her birth. Her

character was a singular one, and but few

actresses could be found possessing the

individuality necessary to portray it, at

least as Frank May would have had it

constructed. The sublime action of his

act in adding to Miss Dwyer's success,

24 per cent of the receipts from the

Salt Lake engagement, showed the estimation which the stars place in the services of

his leading lady.

William H. West's big minuted

reputation was made when he was a member of the firm of Primrose and West.

Not long ago the old partners decided

to split their fortunes and separate ways.

Primrose, however, has now joined

with Lee, Docthadar, and is now tour-

ing the country in '99, that noted comedian. The manager of the Salt Lake

company, and from all accounts is

more than duplicating the success of

the old firm. The height of Mr. West's

success is in the "Drama and Lyric."

The Grand has entered a large measure

of the original acts, the main difference lying in the Chambers, played by a

gentleman who is by no means an

Arnold Daly, in the sequel of Mr. Edwards,

who is as different from Frank Allen

as star from dishonored, and the story

of Miss Stevens, who has scarcely the

personality to her that she has to form.

Mrs. Ethel May, however, has held her

own, although she is not equal to the young

Miss May herself. Young May himself

is a marvel as an actress. From first to last he was truly the "father" in his might to be lived,

and for the brash voice with which he was compelled to play, there could have been nothing desired. Young May has got the parts, and does not carry the atmosphere, or to speak of his distinguished father, but with his astonishing ability to imitate his father's style, make up, and his expression, down to the minutest item of "nothing" in it, no saying what he has matched his father's.

Miss Dwyer received a welcome

welcome of her talents and worth of the

time which gave her birth. Her

character was a singular one, and but few

actresses could be found possessing the

individuality necessary to portray it, at

least as Frank May would have had it

constructed. The sublime action of his

act in adding to Miss Dwyer's success,

24 per cent of the receipts from the

Salt Lake engagement, showed the estima-

tion which the stars place in the services of

his leading lady.

William H. West's big minuted

reputation was made when he was a member of the firm of Primrose and West.

Not long ago the old partners decided

to split their fortunes and separate ways.

Primrose, however, has now joined

with Lee, Docthadar, and is now tour-

ing the country in '99, that noted comedian. The manager of the Salt Lake

company, and from all accounts is

more than duplicating the success of

the old firm. The height of Mr. West's

success is in the "Drama and Lyric."

The Grand has entered a large measure

of the original acts, the main difference lying in the Chambers, played by a

gentleman who is by no means an

Arnold Daly, in the sequel of Mr. Edwards,

who is as different from Frank Allen

as star from dishonored, and the story

of Miss Stevens, who has scarcely the

personality to her that she has to form.

Mrs. Ethel May, however, has held her

own, although she is not equal to the young

Miss May herself. Young May himself

is a marvel as an actress. From first to last he was truly the "father" in his might to be lived,

and for the brash voice with which he was compelled to play, there could have been nothing desired. Young May has got the parts, and does not carry the atmosphere, or to speak of his distinguished father, but with his astonishing ability to imitate his father's style, make up, and his expression, down to the minutest item of "nothing" in it, no saying what he has matched his father's.

Miss Dwyer received a welcome

welcome of her talents and worth of the

time which gave her birth. Her

character was a singular one, and but few

actresses could be found possessing the

individuality necessary to portray it, at

least as Frank May would have had it

constructed. The sublime action of his

act in adding to Miss Dwyer's success,

24 per cent of the receipts from the

Salt Lake engagement, showed the estimation which the stars place in the services of

his leading lady.

William H. West's big minuted

reputation was made when he was a member of the firm of Primrose and West.

Not long ago the old partners decided

to split their fortunes and separate ways.

Primrose, however, has now joined

with Lee, Docthadar, and is now tour-

ing the country in '99, that noted comedian. The manager of the Salt Lake

company, and from all accounts is

more than duplicating the success of

the old firm. The height of Mr. West's

success is in the "Drama and Lyric."

The Grand has entered a large measure

of the original acts, the main difference lying in the Chambers, played by a

gentleman who is by no means an

Arnold Daly, in the sequel of Mr. Edwards,

who is as different from Frank Allen

as star from dishonored, and the story

of Miss Stevens, who has scarcely the

personality to her that she has to form.

Mrs. Ethel May, however, has held her

own, although she is not equal to the young

Miss May herself. Young May himself

is a marvel as an actress. From first to last he was truly the "father" in his might to be lived,

and for the brash voice with which he was compelled to play, there could have been nothing desired. Young May has got the parts, and does not carry the atmosphere, or to speak of his distinguished father, but with his astonishing ability to imitate his father's style, make up, and his expression, down to the minutest item of "nothing" in it, no saying what he has matched his father's.

Miss Dwyer received a welcome

welcome of her talents and worth of the

time which gave her birth. Her

character was a singular one, and but few

actresses could be found possessing the

individuality necessary to portray it, at

least as Frank May would have had it

constructed. The sublime action of his

act in adding to Miss Dwyer's success,

24 per cent of the receipts from the

Salt Lake engagement, showed the estima-

tion which the stars place in the services of

his leading lady.

William H. West's big minuted