MURPHY HAD MANY CLOSE FINISHES

Great Colored Rider Was Undoubtedly a First Class Jockey.

HE SCARED LUCKY BALDWIN.

More Than One Occasion Possibly Held Back Sure Win to Make Race Fast.

C. C. Pettus of the Washington Star editor of the following interesting story concerning Jockey Isaac Murphy's close finishes:

Pettus to the painfully incompetent work of the young jockey at Saratoga's track, which resulted in his mount dark Army being disqualified for a race that he won by nearly two lengths after swerving into Sir Toddington, Harry Harris, one of the few capable colored trainers we have left, said: "I never saw a negro jockey in my time ride such a slovenly finish as that, and I have seen the best of them all over our country from Abe and Walker to Murphy. Why, Murphy would have killed that Anthony horse so close to the rails today that he would have beaten Toddington only an eye-blink, notwithstanding the fact that Murphy had made a big jump on Rapio, and the horse only got by a few inches, when he could have won by a length, the tall California colt Murphy to cut out those neck-and-neck finishes, thereafter, and win by larger margins, so that near-sighted judges could not fail to see him."

But fast friends as Lucky Baldwin and Murphy became, the latter's lifelong close finishes was the talk of the California's other racetracks one day at San Joaquin after Baldwin had made a big jump on Rapio, and the horse only got by a few inches, when he could have won by a length, the tall California colt Murphy to cut out those neck-and-neck finishes, thereafter, and win by larger margins, so that near-sighted judges could not fail to see him."

SEASON OPENS OCT. 1.

And when I say anything to him he pouts and sulks."

By this time the front runners were at the quarter pole and, while Volante had closed up a bit, he was still far behind, making the back stretch as to look hopeless out of it. Reaching the half mile pole he was still a dozen lengths behind and Baldwin, who was sitting in the top row of seats, arose and began to walk up and down, saying to his companion and a couple of other friends: "If I only had a whip long enough I'd wake up that nigga, blast him!"

Wills and the other two men, however, were in Murphy's secret, and as they winked at each other began to encourage Baldwin, who was now in a sweat for the leaders were now at the three-quarter pole and while Volante had begun to close up, he was still 10 lengths back, and the finish only a quarter of a mile away. Then Baldwin gave up and started for the stairs, saying: "It's no use boys. That black rascal has waited too long and he will never get up. I am going down town. I won't stay here and see my horse beaten."

Baldwin by this time had gone down several stairs, when Wills called him, "Come back, governor, come back! Murphy has got a-going." When Baldwin reached the top of the stairs the field was in the home stretch and Volante, though still back half a dozen lengths away, was coming with a rush like an express train. The big crowd was in a roar of excitement, some shouting for the leaders and others calling on Murphy to "Wake up that negro."

SWALLOWED TOBACCO.

At the furlong pole Volante was within four lengths of the leader and closing fast. But the distance looked too short for him to get up, and by this time Wills and his two conspirators had forgotten Baldwin in their excitement and were yelling at Murphy to "Wake up that negro."

As if Murphy heard them and recognized their voices, he now for the first time in the race raised his whip and gave Volante one reminder, and one only. That was enough, for the horses came from it like a shot from a gun, reaching the leader 30 yards from the finish, got up and won by a head in the last strides amid the shouts of the crowd. As Wills turned to look for Baldwin he was leaning over the railing with his back to the track. He had swallowed his tobacco!

For a week afterward Murphy kept out of Baldwin's sight until his employer had time to cool down. He never afterward gave Baldwin quite such a shock.
