I stand by the side of a silver brook,
In the glow of the morning light,
Which chased away what the autumn brought.

The results glancing across the broad sunset suggest there to stay.
 Moving the face of the little stream, laughing the living day.

And I thought as I gazed at the picture fair
 'Twas as bright as a millenium dream.

So life like the hawk to the childhood's more
Happier and better away,
When the sunshine of joy and comfort went

These are the flowers which we pluck in our youth
With a hand that is careless and free;

As we onward sail to the sea,
 Ah, could we but tarry and rest on thy banks
 Content with the bliss that is ours,
 Not hurrying on with the river's broad course.

But Childhood and Youth, Innocence and Ours,

"BALL MARKED."
