Herman Hilar and Clarence Melnitz, two miners who worked in the Nevada mine, near Prosser, Arizona, were taken to death Friday night by a premature blast. The men were at work on the day shift, and when the night shift went into the drift they found the bodies badly mutilated. An examination of the work revealed the cause of death. The men had prepared four holes to shoot as they left work. Two were found to be ready to shoot, while the other two had exploded and killed the men to death. Just what caused the accident can only be conjectured, but it is believed that the powder was probably thrown, and the explosion must have been a big one.
