IRRIGATION ODE GIVEN AT TABERNACLE

Large Audience Greeted Famous Ogden Choir in Splendid Rendition Last Night.

OGDEN, Dec. 2.—The large and appreciative audience which greeted the Ogden tabernacle choir and soloists in the rendition of the famous "Irrigation Ode" at the tabernacle last evening was an inspiration. Every line of the beautiful ode was closely followed and appreciated. The choir, under the leadership of Prof. Joseph Ballantyne, with John J. McClellan at the pipe organ, did splendid work. The strong chorus work was well up to past standards of this splendid organization, which has a national wide reputation for chorus singing. The voices seemed well balanced in all the many changes from minor to major movements. The music depicted the arid deserts, the barren wastes, the coming of the founders of irrigation and the verdant paradise resulting from the work of these pioneers. The soloists all did splendid work and special mention should be made of Mrs. Harold Peery, who sang the leading part, Mr. Fred C. Graham and Mr. Horace S. Ensign.

ON TRIAL FOR MURDER OF HIS FATHER

Shocking Disclosures at Hearing of Paul Pierre at St. Anthony, Ida.

(Special Correspondence.)
ST. ANTHONY, Idaho, Dec. 6.—In the district court this week is being heard the trial of Paul Pierre for the murder of his father, Gustave Pierre, on July 22 of this year, at the family homestead at Mud Lake, this state.

The heinousness of the crime is attracting widespread interest in the trial, the courtroom being packed with spectators from all parts of the county. County Atty. McConnell expects to implicate every member of the Pierre family and even the sweetheart of one of the Pierre boys. The attorney believes Paul was the agent of the combined family in killing his father, so that they might gain possession of his little fortune of $5,000, go to the cities and squander it and see life.

The fact that Gustave Pierre was insane and dangerous to his household comprises the chief argument of Atty. Holden of Idaho Falls, who represents the defense. But the stand taken by the prosecuting attorney and his repeated presentation of facts pointing toward conspiracy and that there had been previous attempts to put the head of the family out of the way, tend to dislodge the arguments of the defense.

The Pierres came to America from Belgium and for several years lived at Streator, Ill., where the two boys were born. Gustave took his family to Idaho a year ago, locating on a homestead.

The story of the crime as told by Paul Pierre is a most shocking one. According to Paul's statement, the father had been abusing a dog in front of the home, when Paul seized a Winchester rifle and shot him. The first bullet failed to take effect and after being hurled to the ground he rose and questioning stared at his son.

"My father was very profane," said Paul Pierre when he made his confession. "I didn't want to see him die with an oath on his lips and so I only sent another bullet into his body, right over his heart, and he fell dead."
The scenes that followed, disclosed by the confession, give the authorities ground for believing that the murder of Gustave Pierre was the result of a conspiracy. All members of the Pierre family and Elsie Trapp, who was soon to be the bride of Edward Pierre, came out to view the body when Paul had announced that "the old man was dead," and with apparent satisfaction at the dispatch of the deed wrapped it in a blanket. Then the wife of the dead man, his two sons and prospective daughter-in-law made preparations for funeral services.

Lumber was scarce at the Pierre ranch on Mud Lake. Paul states in his confession, and he had to rip boards out of the heart of the ranch in order to construct a coffin. When this rude box had been made the two sons placed Gustave Pierre in the crude casket. Then a shallow grave was dug and the family waited until nightfall for the burial.

But expected darkness did not come. Instead, a bright moon lit the plains with a light like day. The burial was delayed for hours in hope that a cloud might shadow the moon. But this did not come, and impatient, the two sons carried the body to the newly opened grave. The casket was lowered and the family knelt in prayers as Paul Pierre, who had killed his father, tossed earth over the casket and attempted to say a committal service. Under the bright moon the family remained in prayer until the mother closed this unusual funeral service with an appeal that her youngest son might be forgiven for the deed.

Suspicion was aroused among the neighbors when conflicting statements were made as to the disappearance of the head of the house. Paul Pierre explained that his father had gone back to the old home in Belgium to look after certain affairs that had developed in the death of a relative. Then Mrs. Pierre said her husband had gone to Washington to seek work in the coal fields, with later intentions to prospect for gold in California. The other son had a different story to tell, and the prospective bride maintained that the aged homemaker had disappeared unknown to members of the family.
Investigation of the disappearance of the aged Gustave Pierre by Constable Sheeley of Market Lake threw suspicion on Paul Pierre. He placed him under arrest and obtained a confession, under which he removed him to St. Anthony, where the story of the unusual crime led to the arrest of all members of the Pierre family and Elsie Trapp. They had left the ranch where the murder had been committed and were discovered at night by Idaho Falls officers in a secluded mountainous section of the country.

In his confession, Paul Pierre insisted that his father had labored under hallucinations that his wife was not true to him and that his children were trying to rob him of his wealth and his cattle and horses, and burn the buildings on the ranch and then take his own life.
"On the following morning," stated Paul Pierre, "my father terribly abused mother, and when I saw him kick and curse at the dog I feared that he would carry out his threat of the day before. Without a moment's hesitation I seized my rifle and shot him."
