It was reported at Saturday afternoon's meeting of the Horticultural society that 190,000 fruit trees had been sold by the Utah Horticultural society during the year. The county commissioners were commended for granting a rebate on tree planting and cultivating, and the board was requested to allow full bounty on English sparrows and was asked to give prizes for orchard cultivation as well as gardens, at the coming state fair. Immediate spraying for the codling moth was advocated, and it was urged that horticultural societies be organized throughout the state.

No definite action was taken by Mayor Morris and the city council Saturday afternoon on the proposition submitted by C. Garff & Son of Logan, to install an electric light plant in this city and sell the same to the city after 10 years. The proposition was published in full in Saturday's "News." The committee will probably insist on a clause being inserted in the agreement whereby the city can purchase the plant before the 10 years expires, and in case of a disagreement as to the terms of the sale, the city is to choose one person as arbitrator and the two thus chosen will select a third. The committee will meet again and consider the matter before it is submitted to the council.

Amusements.

Performances like Mansfield's "Ivan the Terrible," given at the theater Saturday night, are markers of epochs in the theatrical history of any community. The younger generation of our theater goers, who have been accustomed to hear their elders shake their heads over the decadence of the drama, and to mourn the departed days of Booth, Barrett, McCullough and Edwin Adams, may take comfort in the thought that those stars, resplendent as they were, really gave finer presentations than that which it was our privilege to behold at the theater Saturday night. Indeed Mansfield's portrayal of the wretched tyrant of the Russians, particularly the dying scene, was truly compared by competent judges with the best of the great actors, and with Irving and Sheridan's Louis XI. Ivan is a type of character similar to the French tyrant, and the power, craftiness, cruelty and superstition with which Mr. Mansfield invested it, have surely not been excelled by any of the masters, either living or dead.

To appreciate fully Mansfield's actual and artistic art—which is his might be the better word—one needs to see him as he will shine during his San Francisco engagement, when he will appear as Beau Brummel one night, Ivan the next, Jekyll and Hyde the next, and the like. He is a young student in "Old Heidelberg" the next. The astonishing contrasts he presents in this widely varying round of characters, from the severest fastidious to the most dissipated, could be subjected, but Mansfield emerges triumphant from all of them.

Saturday night's audience must have been an inspiration to the actor, diffusing as it is said to be to please him. With prices advanced to $2.50 for the best seats, there were not enough of them to satisfy the demand, and a second night could have been sold out as readily as the first. It goes without saying that the staid and the support were of a high order of excellence. Mansfield would not be the artist he is, if he stopped at anything short of the admirable. The scenery and dressing were sumptuous, while the supporting artists—to whom the play really gives little opportunity, especially among the ladies—were strong and capable throughout. Mr. Arthur Forrest, Mr. Wenman and Miss Ida Conquest, of whom the audience would gladly have seen more) were the leading figures in the cast, after the star.

The Grand will be dark tonight, and the "Ham Show" and the theatre has the entire right of way on amusements.

Held's band closed its 1903-1904 season at the Grand theater last night, with great elation, before a crowded audience. The band's efforts of a very high order, and showed the effects of long and faithful work. The house was appreciative, so that the musicians did not lack for encouragement.

The "Sligh bel serenade" was especially well received, as was also the saxophone and flute duet, and the "Sole of Rochelle" was a difficult work excellently performed. Mr. Phillips' tenor solo was well received, and the performance of the band was of the best performance of the kind ever given in this city. Miss Mulvey particularly proved herself an artist; and it is only fair to say that Prof. Schettler has brought up his players to an high order of performance.

The band has had the most successful season in its history. The season's attendance has numbered 18,550 people, and the sum paid out to members of the band was $4,000. Held begins his summer work next Sunday afternoon, at Liberty Park.

THE ADVERTISING MERCHANT SUCCEEDS

Because the enterprise he exhibits in putting out attractive advertisements is exhibited also in his buying, his selling, and in his general management.

If a man is a good advertiser, it is strong circumstantial evidence that he is a good store-keeper.

The buying public has found this out. They patronize the merchants whose advertisements appeal to them.
