

METHOD IN STUDY.

Dr. Talmage's Address Before the University and Society.

A SUBJECT OF DEEP INTEREST.

And was thoroughly discussed by an Instructor of Capillary and Pneumonia.

The following is a synopsis of a lecture upon "Method in Study," delivered by Dr. J. E. Talmage before the Normal Society of the University at Utah, October 27, 1893. The lecture speaks in an extensive manner, without use of notes, and the report given below is compiled from reporter's notes, carefully revised.

It is not a pleasure and an honor at any time to stand with a body of earnest fellow workers, and as I claim to be a student, however able, and something of a teacher, however inept, I prize myself in the claim of family connection with all others of the kind. Whenever I meet one such, I feel with my nature the swelling impulse that tells of kinship. I understand that I have the honor of addressing a body of teachers, teachers in fact as teachers in experience. I am not in teaching, therefore, but I stand before an assembly of students. The most experienced of the normal teachers before me are doubtless among those who most fully deserve the title of students. As long as one remains a teacher he must be a learner, a student, a pupil, and a child.

As we are all then students in fact and in profession, it is not surprising that we should all be in the same boat, and that we should all be in the same boat.
