Breath Ceased During Fainting Spells.

Revived by Artificial

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure

Fainting spells are a sure indication of a weak heart. The heart cannot do the work required of it and stops beating. If it ceases for more than a minute death ensues. Weak hearts must have aid from the outside, such as Dr. Miles' Heart Cure alone can give. It is a heart tonic. It requires the pulse enis a heart tonic. It regulates the pulse, en-riches the blood and improves the circulation.

"For two years my wife was in very poor health. At first her back troubled her a great deal, then she had shortness of breath and irregularity of the periods. The pain in her back grew worse and extended to the connection of the spinal cord at the base of the brain and from there to her heart. She had two very bad sinking spells, when the pain in her heart was most intense and her breath stopped. The second time we had to resort to artificial respiration to revive her. We were advised to give Dr. Miles' Heart Cure a trial and I bougst a bottle and began giving it as directed. We found the doses were too strong, so I gave her half-doses three times a day, and she began to improve. After she had taken two bottles the pains were all gone and she was feeling like a new woman. She continued the Heart Cure in small doses for several months and is now enjoying better health than for the past six years."-M. J. THOMPSON, Dept. County Clerk, Klamath P. O., Cal.

He was the greatest leader his party ever had in It was a day of the early February either house of Congress, but he led more by fear than by reason or prin-1894, and of it a veteran employe of the national house of representatives made remark: "I was here when the pres." ciple, and never by love at all. Had he been a warrior men would have gone he been a warrior men would have gone to death for him, as other men went to death for Tamerlane, and not as some men died for Lee. He was a proud man, yet it was not the pride of chivalry, but rather the pride of duty done. He could be as haughty as Vere de Vere or Howard, yet it was not the pride of blood or station, but a deflance of what he considered mean or error. "And the king said unto his servants, Know ye not that there is a price and dent of the United States peached: I was here when there was were enacted; but in all my time the close of the tariff debate in the fiftythird Congress, last Thursday, sur passed them all as an exhibition of parliamentary pageantry." There were no gaudy trappings, Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Is-rael?" ...... Reed's argument was incisive, but his speech was not as clear as that of his some time rival, Carlisle. His state-ment was always striking, but he was not the orator William L. Wilson was. As a theoretical and as a practical statesman he was less than William Pitt Fessenden, but as a civic adminis-trator, his party never produced his equal-not even in Lincoln, or Stanton, or Grant. As a master of the king's English he was a wonder, but he was no such wizard of the English tongue as John

James Ingalls or L. Q. C. Lamar. As a debator he was perhaps inferior to James A. Garfield or Benjamin H. Hill, and yet, all in all, he never met his match in debate—this John Balfour of Burley, from the state of Maine. As a platform speaker, W. Bourke Cockran was doubly his master-ly expression and in dramatic fervor-but there was never a day of his career that he could not have given more de-light to an intelligent audience than the brilliant and eloquent Irishman. He was without magnetism and with He was without magnetism and with-out sham. He was without vanity and he despised flattery. He was a writer in the public press, and while his productions were possibly inferior to the late Judge Jere Black's, they were equally delightful productions.

Did he have learning? Doubtless; but ne refused to show it in public addresses. He was too imperious for that. His every utterance was, "I, Tom Reed, stand alone, and will lean on nothing and on no man." The one he most resembled was Roscoe Conk-ling, and he was little like Conkling. The one man he loved was Nelson Dingley, and he was less like Dingley than any other man. He would have been great as president. He might have been unjust as chief justice. He could not have been dishonest in any station, under any conditions, or under any circumstances. As leader of the most insignificant minority in point of numbers he overthrew Charles F. Crisp, a kindred, but lesser spirit, at the head of the greatest numerical majority in our national parliamentary history. Certainly, he was sometimes wrong. Certainly he was never little, base ervile A writer competent for the task would confer a favor on the public if he would compose an essay contrasting Thomas

B. Reed and William L. Wilson. Reed B. Reed and William L. wilson, heed was as different from Wilson as he was from Dingley, except that Wilson was a very brilliant man, which Dingley was not, and which Reed was.

It is difficult to recall the two men-Reed and Wilson-without reverting to Dean Swift and Joseph Addison. 1 1,000 of the very best judges of the mat ter could be got together and required to vote on the question, possibly 900 of the number would decide that Jonathan Swift was the greatest of the English men of letters since Shakespeare; but not one would be found who loved him. Why? Because Swift refused to be loved. It would be further agreed that Addison was a most lovable man, and that Steele was a most delightful man. Swift was in solitude-so great was Samuel Johnson, one of Carlyle's he-roes, would not walk on the same side of the street the dean of St. Patrick's trod. Thackeray, who knew more of time had arrived. At night the adults steel. wilson was much like Addison had be confined himself to letters. He had much of the genius of Addison, and possibily would have made as much fame had he been a Grub streeter and let politics alone. John Randolph Tucker used to throw his arms around James A. Garfield,and Garfield did return the embrace. Someber in their arms. body said that the two were the ones of modern times who could have held converse in his native tongue with Cicero, could that matchless orator have come out of the grave. Not so with Thomas B. Reed and Bourke Cockran-men far more differ-ent than Tucker and Garfield. There was no demonstration in the chumship of the man from Maine and the man from Tammany. Reed could live with Balzac, and Cockran loved to discuss that machless genius, and so this Catholic Irishman and the Yankee of the Yankees were inseparable. Reed was of uncorrupted New Eng-land blood; Cockran is as Irish as Danlel O'Connell. Reed looked upon Oliver Cromwell as the ideal administrator, a man who would have de-Catholicized Ireland and made every community a Londonderry: Cockran must view Oliver's government of Ireland with froz-en horror. Reed believed the battle of the Boyne the triumph of virtue over original sin, and Cockran thinks it was the victory of anti-Christ. But they had this in common—they "I would lie in her embrace one mo-ment if I knew she would condemn my were endowed with genius. The chum-ship between Gens, Sherman and Joseph If. Johnston is easy of explanation They had a common hatred-Jefferson Devis-and that is the closest bond of sympathy known to human life. Sena-tors Sherman and Hoar had a common ous that Fate would have halted, and a voice so imperious that Fate would tors Sherman and Hoar had a common ancestor—that was enough to make such men friends. But the chumship of Reed and Cockran was the strang-cst since James II feit infatuation with Catharine Sedley. Reed positively hated the south when he first came to Congress, and had much contempt for things southern when he left Congress. The man could shalt have thy will! when he left Congress. The man could take a question of debate by the throat and smile it as we are told Othello smote the malignant and the turbaned Turk who beat a Venetian and ira-duced the state, but Reed had no im-City Star. agination and no sympathy. When the American Waverley is when the American waverley is written its herces will come from the south-the south that got the glory and left to the north the victory. James G. Elsine could not have read this passage from the "Lay of the Last Minstrel" without a thrill of overpowering emo-tion: tion: "Low as that tide has ebbed with me, It still reflects to memory's eye
