NEW STORIES OF THE FIGHT AT MANILA.

The Philippines No Place for Americans to Live—The Club Says.

P. D. Shepherd, one of the men who captured the regular army at Fort Aguinaldo in the opening of the Philippine-American war, and who was sent to Manila as a result of the Philippine United States industry, pointed his finger to the north on the 29th of October, and said that he had no intention of returning to Manila.

Shepherd was a member of company I of the Philippine army, the same company that was captured by the Americans at the battle of Manila.

In conversation with a "News" representative today he gave a number of facts that have not yet been published, and which will be of interest to the American people.

He said that the Americans will not be able to hold Manila, and that the only way to get out of the country is to go to the north.
