Severe Fire.
DENVER, Jan. 4.—A Salda, Col., special to the News, dated Jan. 2, says: A fire broke out a few minutes after 10 o'clock this morning in the Mulvany Hotel, a new three-story building only partially completed. The workmen were busily engaged in the upper stories of the building when their attention was attracted by the smoke coming up the stairway and on going below the building they found it to be on fire. They could give no cause for the fire, but from the bulk of the building it was supposed to have originated in the room occupied by the carpenters. In spite of the efforts of the firemen the flames spread rapidly down the east side of the building, sweeping everything before them. The fire broke out in the room occupied by the carpenters. Mexican Murders.
ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 4.—The newspapers of this city publish a Russian translation of the forged documents sent to the czar. The tone of the press toward Germany has completely changed.

The czar, in his congratulatory letter to the pope, said he was desirous of insuring the interests of his Catholic subjects and concluded as follows: "I do not doubt that the high wisdom of which your holiness gives so many proofs will enable me to do so."

THOSE WHO CAVILED.
With Cleveland and denounced his views, were such as had pre-determined a quarrel and wouldn't approve the Declaration of Independence if it came from his hand. The republican leaders had not only done nothing themselves, but had hindered the efforts of everybody else. They were jealous of the President because he had disturbed their policy of inaction. Their anger was kindled because such ostentatious tactics could swell them no longer.

At the close of Voorhes' speech, they replied briefly. The president's resolution to refer the President's message was not acted upon. The Senate went into secret session and when the doors were opened adjourned.

HOUSE.

President's Savings.
President Cleveland is supposed to be worth about $100,000, and he owns, it is said, a real estate in Indiana which is rapidly advancing in value. President Arthur left much less than he was supposed to be worth. Garfield shortly before his death owed $30,000 to Gen. Hayes, and Grant did not add to his fortune by his White House career. Hayes made money out of the Presidency and is rich through inheritances and economy. The President, as a rule, have not saved money during their Presidency; but the same story which made them Presidents would, if they had been used in the field of money-making and money-saving, have given them fortunes.

Martin Van Buren made money out of politics. He started life poor and died well to do. One estimate puts his estate at $800,000, and he made money in real estate as well as in the law. Both of the Adams were money savers. If not money makers.

The letters of John Adams, the second President, to his wife Abigail, repeatedly urge her to cut down the household expenses and to practice economy. He himself lived on oysters and lemonade, and he walked far oftener than he rode.

John Quincy Adams received nearly a half million dollars from the Government in salaries during his lifetime, and he possessed the Yankee thrift. The Adams family at present is one of the richest in New England, and it was told that John Adams, the first President, had more than a million dollars invested in real estate there. He has railroad stocks and bonds in addition, and he makes his money breed like Australian rabbits.

Andrew Jackson spent more than his salary while he was in the White House and he had to borrow money to keep up his expenses. Thomas Jefferson borrowed the money that carried him out of Washington when he left the Presidency, and Andrew Johnson, though he entertained considerably, is supposed to have saved at least $50,000 during his White House career.

He died, it is said, worth about $100,000, and the most of this came from economy. He was a pretty good saver for a tailor to leave. James Buchanan was making about $5,000 a year when he entered Congress, and he spent during his Presidency what was left from his living expenses in charity. He was not, however, a rich man when he died, and his estate of Wheatlands was sold a year or two ago.

President Lincoln began life as a woolcarder. During the three years he was engaged to his sweetheart he had to work for his living. He was a poor man when he began to practice law. During the first years of their marriage he did the housework and taught school, and still he died one of the richest of the Presidents. The greater part of his fortune, however, came from his second marriage.
