EDITORIAL NOTES.

The N. Y. Sun says: Laugh at Mr. Barrett's personal peculiarities as we may, and sneer at his icy vanity as we please, we cannot overlook the fact that of all American actors he is the only one to give us standard American plays. His "Pendragon," "York," and "Francisco da Rimini" are an American repertory by the side of which no other contemporary actor can make a respectable showing.

The Emperor of China, who is sixteen years old, sits with gold-tipped chop sticks of ivory, and sleeps on a bedstead carved and ornamented with gold and ivory, which has been used for two centuries. He studies Chinese, and marches three hours a day, and spends two hours in archery and riding. Everyone, even his father and mother, kneels to him on entering his sacred presence. He is attended by eight eunuchs, who will not let him overeat.

Charles Young, otherwise known as "Texas Charlie," has gone to his old home at Albany, N. Y., attended in a backstreet suit constructed in the most elaborate Apache style. He is a son of the late Colonel W. H. Young, of the Eighteenth New York Infantry, and besides being a captain in the Seventh New York Regiment, served throughout the civil war. For the past eighteen years he has been a scout in California, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas. He was with Crook in the late Apache campaign, and has just been honorably discharged from a company of Texas Rangers. He reports everything quiet on the border.

Attracted by the piteous howl of a dog, a Brandenburg, Prussia, peasant found a huge eagle on the back of a watchdog. The peasant ran to fetch a farm bailiff. When the two came the bird was hopping around, badly disabled. A shot dispatched him. The dog was found dead—torn to pieces. The eagle was black, with white shoulders, and was what is called an imperial eagle. On his left foot was a gold ring, on which were cut the letters, still quite visible: "H. K. e. c. k." underneath which was the word "Eperjes;" and on the other side the date, "10, 9, 27." Eperjes is a town in Upper Hungary, not very far from the northern Carpathians.

There are many women who complain if their housemaids show a fondness for reading, even in moments of leisure; but they could hardly find the service they like in the servant who cannot read. Did any of you ever notice the difference between the educated and the uneducated housekeeper? The one brings all her intelligence to bear upon her work; the other works with a stolidness that betrays her sluggish brain. If all her servants were educated, one would save money even at a higher rate of wages than by employing uneducated women. One of the first business houses in New York, known as well in Europe as in this country, furnishes books, teachers and apparatus for a thorough instruction of all their employees in the common branches and the rudiments of science and mechanics, and requiring them to give an hour daily at recitation, for which they prepare out of work hours.

A DANGEROUS SENTIMENT.

EX-SENATOR BRUCE, (colored) Register of the United States Treasury, is credited with having expressed a very dangerous sentiment on day or two ago. Speaking of the recent Supreme Court decision on the Civil Rights bill, he is represented as saying: "It does not reflect the sentiment of the people as a court decision ought to do." It is difficult to comprehend how a supposedly sensible, capable and intelligent man could entertain so malicious a view as expressed in that sentence. What would be the result if it prevailed in the courts of the country? Their judicial functions proper would be abolished, and the chief bulwarks of human liberty swept away. It would only devote upon them to ascertain the popular sentiment on any subject requiring their cognizance and action, and give their decisions accordingly.

Public sentiment should not enter into the decisions of courts at all except it be in harmony with the Constitution and laws made in union with that glorious instrument. Unfortunately, the popular feeling is too often in opposition to the right. The masses not being disposed to investigate matters of moment and sound them in all their depths with the touchstone of reason, are often swayed by prejudice and liable to be influenced in their bearings by designing knaves and demagogues. They are apt to be inclined by the influence of passion or self-interest, and their sentiment should never govern the decisions of the courts, whose chief glory consists in the power to act dispassionately and after the most careful research and consideration.

When the popular sentiment and the spirit and intent of the law are harmonious, then the courts are doubly strong when they decide in the proper direction. We have always held the opinion since the agitation of the liquor question in Northern Utah, that the sentiment of the people—in favor of prohibition—was in union with the intent of the law, though the purport was somewhat vaguely expressed. Their honors of the Supreme Court of the Territory appeared to take a different view, however, and their decision fell in favor of the liquor traffic.

We cite this as an instance of the popular sentiment being in conformity with the genius of the law, and with which we consequently do not think the Court would have erred in deciding in harmony.

We are afraid ex-Senator Bruce expresses a view that is altogether too prevalent already, and the insidious spread of such an opinion is dangerous to the commonwealth. If once fairly took hold of the judiciary of the country it would reduce the government to chaos; men clothed with the emblems of humanity as other people. Of all existing safeguards in the body politic, the judiciary is by far the most important, and it is a deplorable fact that there is none too much confidence in the judicial structure as a whole now. This fact is felt more forcibly by a community like this than any other. The men who preside in the Courts of Utah are placed in their positions without the sanction of the people, and in view of the prejudice abroad against the majority of the citizens kept in a state of chronic activity by a small band of designing demagogues who reside here, perhaps in no other field are the inducements so strong for the courts to be awayed by general sentiment in place of the merits of matters in litigation. The people here have occasionally suffered severely in consequence. Men who have occupied positions on the bench have taken popular sentiment as their guide, and decided times almost without number in opposition to the law and constitutional principles. Temporary wrongs in this way inflicted, might often have been rendered permanent but for the intervention of dispassionate deacons of the Supreme Tribunal of the land.

The Constitution is the supreme law of the land, but in ex-Senator Bruce's estimation popular sentiment should be lifted to that exalted position. The expression of such a view as that is an implicit plea in favor of mob law.

SPREAD THE TRUTH.

We are in receipt of a letter from a gentleman in the East, to whose request for papers giving correct ideas of the character and condition of the "Mormons" we responded a short time since. He now writes to the effect that his eyes are opened to the fact that the Latter-day Saints are far from being the depraved and blood-thirsty people they have been represented as being. While there are some things in their religion that he considers erroneous, on the other hand, there are many others that are good, true and beautiful.

It is quite a progressive step to take so far to investigate "Mormonism" as to be able to see beauties in it. The probabilities are that the more he investigates, if he continues in the good work, the more of beauty and truth he will see in the system, and the objections he now holds will, by proper explanations, disappear as the early sun before the genial rays of the sun. The correspondent is evidently a believer in the Scriptures, and it is certain that he cannot very well retain a belief in them and repudiate what the world call "Mormonism" in whole or in part.

There is one barrier in the way of our correspondent, however. It is an exceedingly common one. He requests in his communication that his identity be not made public as, being connected with a religious body, if it were known that he was even enquiring in relation to the "Mormons" the consequences would be rather dreadful. This should be an additional evidence to him of the truth of the system after which he has been stretching out just a little, because if he feels sure that his name would be cast out as evil, on account of a mere inquiry into the status of a popularly despised religious body, what should be naturally expect if he were really to take up his cross, and identify himself with it?

But there is a moral in this incident which should not be lost sight of. It shows the influence wielded by this journal and other publications giving proper representations of the character of the community of Latter-day Saints upon those whose information has heretofore been derived entirely from opposition, unfavorable and unreliable sources. Those who are interested in spreading the truth should be sufficiently so to help to circulate abroad the literary mediums by which it can be communicated to the people.

A SPITEFUL FLING.

At Hebron, Conn., lately a clergyman raised trouble in his church by some straightforward talk in the pulpit. It seems that one of the leading members, a man of large wealth, has been married four times, having been divorced in two cases. His third wife is a member of the same church, and his fourth, before he could marry her, was compelled to secure a legal separation from her husband. This man's voice, was frequently heard in prayer meeting, a circumstance which naturally angered the clergyman. Finally he could endure the travesty of religion no longer, so he preached a sermon giving a spirited sketch of a whitened sepulchre, whom every one recognized as the much-married Pharisee. The latter was so wrought up at what he called a personal onslaught upon himself that he has brought suit for $5,000 for defamation of character.

The San Francisco Chronicle in its customary unfair, spiteful and dishonest style says: "Peace-makers in the church are trying to placate the Connecticut Mormon, because he is a heavy contributor to the current expenses, but the clergyman will make no apology for telling the truth." The statement that the obnoxious disrupter of other people's families is a "Mormon" is not only a self-evident and spiteful falsehood, but the fling is childish, senseless and flabby. The outspoken clergyman is not a "Mormon," but it was he who acted the more like one. A little of the truthful disposition of the Connecticut minister would be of service to the Chronicle.

A GIRL'S DEAD DEATH.

Miss Lizzie Belle, daughter of Benjamin F. and Clara A. Stevens, died in Livermore Centre, Me., Sept. 27th, under peculiar circumstances. Her age was 15 years and 9 months. Her parents sent the Lewiston Journal this strange story of her death:

"Lizzie was employed in the box factory at Richmond's Mill, covering the little boxes turned there. One morning a basket of boxes was turned upon her bench. She put her hands in them to sift the sawdust from them, and discovered something among them, which she took hold of and brought to light. To her great horror it was a very large spotted snake. She was speechless for a while, but at length revived and said to the boss of the mill, 'that awful big snake.' He said it made him shudder to touch it. She kept about for several weeks after with the horror of that dreadful snake ever before her. She would go to bed nights but could not sleep or even remain in her bed; for that dreadful snake was ever around her. She kept up as long as she could, and then took her bed. The first week she seemed comfortable; then she was taken crazy. Her chief talk was the snake. It is said even in her bed or around her, she did not even recognize her father or mother, and her sufferings were heartrending. She lay in this state 10 weeks, and then was stricken with typhoid fever, which ran three weeks. The last few days her senses returned in a measure. Up to the time the fever let up, the doctor called it no disease, simply the result of typhoid fever, which ran three weeks. She suffered and died at last from that terrible shock."

The conqueror is regarded with awe; the wise man commands our esteem; but it is the benevolent man who wins our affection.

In a letter from HON. MRS. PERRY, Castle, Grey, Lincoln, Ireland, Browne's Bronchial Troches are thus referred to: "Having brought your 'Bronchial Troches' with me when I came to reside here, I found that after I had given them away to those I considered required them, the poor people will walk for miles to get a few." For Coughs, Colds, and Throat Diseases they have no equal. Sold only in boxes.
