

Trochu by his firm, yet moderate course, in the management of affairs as military governor of Paris, has gained a large share of respect; but should this successful movement under his guidance, be confirmed, his fame will be world-wide, and he will be on the high road to supreme power in France.

A diversion in favor of the French arms is very much needed; it will relieve the monotony of the war, and, one would think, would almost be grateful even to the Prussians themselves. At any rate it will be an immense relief to France, and will revive the drooping courage of the whole people. It is premature, however, to

THE PRESIDENT AND PARTY.—A dispatch from President Geo. A. Smith, received this morning, per Deseret Telegraph line from Fillmore, says: "Yesterday President Young arrived here about 2 p.m.; meeting was held at six, at which the President was largely present. President Young, Mr. Geo. A. Smith and others Young preached. The juvenile choir performed satisfactorily. A new feature in the meetings here is to have two choirs. The party leave here at half past seven. The weather was large. The weather fine. The President is taking a rest—driving his own team and preaching every night."

PARIS, 30.—Operations commenced yesterday at different points. Ducrot occupied Montreuil, but subsequently evacuated it. The heaviest fighting was at Champ
