He said he was thankful for the privilege the Saints had of meeting together in peace to worship God on the first Sabbath in 1887. The year just past had been an eventful one for them, notably for what was legally termed prosecution, but called by the Saints persecution. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints of persecution had changed in the means adopted but not in its alms dur ing the past flity-six years, for from the time that Josepa Smith, the Prophet, claimed to have received a revelation from heaven, he and his followers had been persecuted. The Christian world had been taught that the canon of Scripture was full, and that the Bible contained all that was that the Bible contained all that was necessary for salvation. When the Prophet Joseph made the statement that an angel had appeared to him and instructed him in the ways of the Lord, in answer to his prayer, it was opposed to the ideas of all the Christian sects. The angel Moroni told Joseph that if he was faithful the

The world thought this message strange, because they did not understand it, yet it was the same as that delivered by Christ when He was on the earth. A knowledge of its truth, and of God, could only be obtained from heaven, through obedience to the ordinances of the Gospel. John the Revelstor saw savage and apparently unprovoked attack upon another darkey, which the latter as hotly resented. The struggle was fierce and brutal in the extreme, the combatants being alternately hurled to the ground with great violation that the same in all its principles as it was in the days of the Savior. The ordinances were identical, and obselve the Gospel. John the Revelator saw in vision the time when the everlasting Gospel would be restored by an angel, an event which had occurred in fulfilment of the prediction recorded by him. This Gospel, being everlasting, was just the same in all its principles as it was in the days of the Savior. The Saints had borne every indignity, but every blow directed against them had made them stronger. The more they were opposed the better they were known, and the greater they became in the hands of the Lord. They were not properly understood, because they were defamed by those whom the adversary stirred up against them. They were patient, however, in doing good to all men, and God would bring off His work triumphant in righteousness. His kingdom would be established, and the law go forth out of Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. The Latter-day Saints believed that it was necessary to have faith in God; to re-

Latter-day Saints believed that it was necessary to have faith in God; to repent of all sin; to be baptized for the remission of sins; to receive the Holy Ghest, and to live lives of righteousness. Those who did this would receive the testimony of the doctrines of the Gospel, and have the inspiration of the Holy Spirit to guide them into all truth. Their house would be built on a rock. But those who rejected these principles would find that they had built on the sand, and followed in the broad foad to destruction.

The invitation was to all the world to forth from the loes of truth, Let Zion be defiled, but the Lord would protect His own. The "Mormon" problem was sought to be solved by their enemies, but the Saints would yet solve the problems of the world. They would suffer and die, if necessary, for the Gospel's sake, but their testimony would still be heard. Those who endured to the end would be saved. God dured to the end would be saved. God would pour out His Spirit richly upon those who were in prison or in exile for His name's sake, and would be with His servants in power. The Saints should be honest, upright, virtuous and exemplary in all things. They should seek after the things of heaven and prepare for a day of trouble. The nation had said the "Mormons" must be put down, but they would not be, because they were established on the principles of right-eousness and good will to all men.
