

The Democratic Queen of Norway.

Until her marriage the present queen of Denmark was known to her intimates as Charlie and to the world at large as one of the brightest and liveliest, most cordial and unaffected girls in the whole British royal family. This world liked to hear occasional stories about her and liked particularly that lively anecdote of her flirtation with the reporter at the railway station.

According to the Strand Magazine, he had come to write up a royal departure, she to bid a friend goodbye. He made notes of the dresses, including her own, and she saw what he was doing.

At last she, too, took out a piece of paper and a pencil scribbled on it something hastily and, crumpling the paper, into a little ball, threw it at the feet of the reporter. The royal message read:

"I wish I were a reporter, too!"

Princess Charlie—or Princess Maude, give her the name by which she was officially known—was brought up very strictly. She was not permitted, it appears, to read a book or to see a play unless the book had been read or the play seen. She was never allowed to make visits unaccompanied by one or both of her parents, except to the home of her French governess, and never received gifts except from her own family.

Curiously, too, the number of her toys was limited. Nearly all her dolls—which were few in number—came from the Marquis of Lorne, with whom she was a great favorite. She was 10 years old before she was allowed to own a watch.

Yet this little princess had a pretty happy time. She cared for music and became an excellent pianist, learned both German and French from her two governesses and received a very careful religious training. In connection with this it may be recalled that she was christened, notwithstanding the fact that she was born a daughter, but at Marlborough House, and that Dean Stanley officiated at this important occasion.

Princess Maude was a child of varied tastes, a devotee of hobbies. She liked riding and cycling—and likes them still—got very fond of photography (in which art her mother is so skilled), took up bookbinding, learned to spin and studied many handicrafts with more than passing interest.

No doubt, too, her influence in stimulating other girls usefully to occupy their leisure time was great. And when she was married the dressing class at the People's palace made for her a tea jacket, of which the bride was not a tea jacket, of which the bride was not

She is still a great reader and is said to retain her early affection for the works of Owen Meredith. She has traveled extensively, knows Russian, likes yachting, plays chess and takes abundant joy in living.

Curious Old Virginia Laws.

DURING one of his last lecture tours through old Virginia, Mr. Harry Ellard was in a small town called Flinastic, which is the county seat of Botetourt county, and there gave a talk to the Confederate Veteran association of that place. He met a number of gentlemen who were connected with the courthouse and who allowed him access to all of the records of the county.

On looking back nearly 140 years he came across a curious order of the court which he copied and which is as follows:

"Be it remembered that at the house of Mr. Robert Breckinridge, in the county of Botetourt, on Tuesday, the thirteenth day of February, in the year of our Lord Christ one thousand seven hundred and seventy, in the colony and dominion of Virginia, that the court orders that the surveyor of Botetourt county do lay off two and one-half acres of land for the use of the county, directed by Robert Breckinridge who shall appoint by court Christian and Stephen Figg to agree with a workman to build a log cabin 24 feet long and 20 feet wide, for a court-house, with a clapboard roof with two small rooms, one at each end, for jury room.

The court doth give leave to James M. Geock to build a log cabin 24 feet long and 16 feet wide, with an addition at the end 18 feet wide and 12 feet long, for a prison in which the Gaoler's house, the expense of which to be paid by the county."

This was the first record Mr. Ellard came across, so it will be seen that by the building of the courthouse and jail law and order began to prevail in this section. Another curious order which Mr. Ellard copied is as follows:

"Order of the colonial court regulating the charge of inkeepers at Flinastic, Virginia, 14th day of February, 1770, under King George III and Tenerife, defender of the faith."

"Ordered that the following rates be observed by inkeepers in Botetourt county to-wit: For East India rum they may demand 10 shillings per gallon, for rum made on this continent 2 shillings 6 pence per gallon. Madera wine 12 shillings per gallon, for Tenerife 11 shillings per gallon, for peach brandy 5 shillings per gallon, for apple brandy 4 shillings per gallon. For Virginia strong malt beer, bottled three months, 1 pence half penny per bottle, same not bottled three months 1 shilling 3 pence for Bumbo with two shills of rum to the quart made with white sugar, 1 shilling 3 pence; for same with brown sugar, 1 shilling. For a warm diet with beer 6 pence, for lodging with clean sheets, one in a bed, 6 pence, two in a bed 3 pence 3 farthings, more than two in a bed nothing."

There was no explanation given as to what Bumbo was, but it might have been a colonial highball.

The Truth About "Ben Hur."

How "Ben-Hur" came to be written year by geometrical progression, and it became the most widely selling book in American literature. Many interesting facts concerning the inspiration and growth of "Ben Hur" are set down in Gen. Wallace in his biography, which is one of the important forthcoming publications.

SENATOR BEVERIDGE WINS ROOSEVELT'S THANKS.

Senator Albert J. Beveridge, of Indiana, a few days ago was the much pleased recipient of a letter from President Roosevelt in which the chief executive gives the young Hoosier statesman full credit for starting the agitation which resulted in the enactment of the meat inspection law. The letter in question accompanied the pen with which the president signed the agricultural bill containing the meat inspection clauses.
