ALLOVER BLACK LACE OVER WHITE SATIN.

Magpie effects were never more fashionable, and with their vogue heavy and fine allover black laces are once again popular. They are made up extensively over white satin or tulle veiled with either white chiffon or net. To a certain extent these costumes follow empire lines, as their trimmings are usually of some heavier fabric, such as satin or chiffon velvet which is employed for the high, raised collar, the panel effects and the tunic and skirt borderings. If rather dense black is not becoming to the face, a white lace or net guimpe may be used; the costume then partakes somewhat of the jumper effect.

HIGH CROWNS STILL THE THING.

Dress hats for late summer continue to be of the high-crowned, depressed-brim order, their trimming depending upon the climate in which they are to be worn. At the seaside ostrich tips are prone to straighten out and look stringlike, but for inland resorts there is nothing more smart than a cluster of fluffy plumes to add to the steeple effect of the modish hat crown. Neck ruffs are worn with most dress hats provided the face be not too full. Even in that event they may be worn by depressing the rows of pleated maline, ribbon or net directly below the chin.

JAPAN AND HER POTTERY.

The Japanese government, to make a single new plate, is expending large sums of money and employing scores of technical and chemical experts. This plate is not a huge steel affair, as is the case with our pottery, but a small, thin, and hard as steel. It is possible an eighth of an inch thick and so fragile that a shot from a bean shooter would smash it into fragments, and yet the making of the plate, Japan believes, is all that interferes with her supremacy in one of the greatest commercial lines.

The plate is not in any sense a secret—millions of them are made openly at Trenton and in New York State and turned out by thousands of tons in Germany. It is simply the ordinary chinaware dinner plate, from which most of the eighty million Americans eat their daily meals.

Yet Japan, although her pottery can turn out the most delicate of egg-shell porcelain, the most beautiful of glazes, the most shapely of vessels decorated with exquisite coloring, is baffled by the ordinary kitchen plate. These scientists of Japan know just what the plate is made of, how its glaze is applied, how it is dried and decorated. All that they lack, they think, is the right sort of earth. In Japan to duplicate it at a price which would give them the foreign market.

And the Japanese government because it believes that the right sort of clay can be found, or be made by combining known pottery material, has followed its usual course of establishing government pottery schools and elaborate clay laboratories.

When Japan wants a particular thing in an industrial line she relies to obtain it almost wholly on one method—the industrial education of her own people to make that thing. First, the Japanese government sends experts all over the world. These experts, often Japan's leading technologists, serve as men laborers or as unskilled crafts-men in factories of Europe and America, simply to gain information about industrial methods.

The next step is to use this information in the government industrial schools and, with this knowledge as a beginning to encourage the students and scientists to go ahead in the national shops and laboratories and discover for themselves improvements which trade rivals have not hit upon.

THE CLAY PROBLEM IN ITS APPLICATION

to making common crockery ware to compete with foreign potteries has been one of Japan's hardest nuts to crack. The work of investigating Japanese clays and experimenting with different combinations of them is now going on under government assistance in the wonderful laboratories and shops of the department of ceramics in the Tokyo Higher Technical schools in the ceramic section of the Arita Art and Industrial school at Saga, and in the plant of the Pottery school at Ishikawaken.

According to Prof. C. B. Richards of Teachers college, secretary of the National Society for the Promotion of Industrial Education, the Tokyo school is one of the few places in the world where the study of pottery on a highly scientific basis is possible. On the side of chemical investigation of ceramics this school ranks with the best of American or European institutions.

In its courses full instruction is given in the technology of clays and earthen glazes, pigments and firing. Especial attention is given also to the combination of earths and compounds for this purpose. At the same time the pupils receive ample shop training in designing, making, decorating and firing porcelain.

In other words Japan is doing for pottery interests, what she is doing for fisheries, breweries, agriculture, stock raising—enabling those who are to take part in the development of those industries to learn at home at the hands of the state the best of European and American discovery.

BISHOP MISSED HIS CALLING.

This story is told by Bishop Dudley of Kentucky of his personal experience.

He was on a hunting expedition near Louisville, and happened to fall in with a local sportsman, whose uncooled admiration for the city man's marksmanship paved the way for further conversation.

"What's your name?" the countryman finally inquired.

"Dudley," was the reply.

"After some exchange of incident and experience, the bishop's interlocutor hazarded:

"Say, Dudley, what business do you follow?"

"I'm a preacher."

"Oh, get out! What are you giving me?"

"But I am. I preach every Sunday."

"Where?"

"In Louisville."

"Well, I never! I never would have thought it! You ain't stuck up a bit like most of the preachers down this way."

An invitation to have his new-made acquaintance preach was accompanied by a scribbled card, and the next Lord's day saw the bishop in his "Sunday best," ushered into the bishop's pew, where he listened intently to both service and sermon.

He was manifestly amazed afterward to have the orator of the morning come down to greet him as cordially and familiarly as in the woods. He managed to stammer his thanks, and added:

"I ain't much of a judge of this kind of thing, parson, but I riz with you and sat with you, and saw the thing through the best I knew how. All the same, if my opinion is worth anything to you, the Lord mount you for a hunter!"—Louisville Courier-Journal.
