CONDUCTOR MADSEN KILLED

On the Fort Douglas Branch of the Utah Central Railroad.

Conductor Lawrence Madsen, a highly respected and efficient employee of the Utah Central Railway company, met with a sad and sudden death on Saturday afternoon about one o'clock, on the Salt Lake and Fort Douglas branch. The train had left Madsen's house and was heading up towards Fort Douglas. A second shock was felt and the train was stopped. When the train was stopped the spot it was found that the front portion of the car on which Madsen was riding had been thrown from the track to the ground, and that the body of the deceased was lying on the ground. AN INDIAN KANSAS HIMSELF

In His Cell at the Utah Penitentiary—Melancholia the Cause.

The inmates of the Utah Penitentiary were startled yesterday morning by the announcement that an Indian named Tawakoo, of the Shoshone tribe, who had been confined in his cell, had committed suicide. The exact hour that the terrible deed was committed is not known, as when the body was discovered it was cold and rigid. An investigation revealed the fact that he had driven a sharp pointed tinny nail into his temple, through the ear, and that it would go as far as the brain.

The deceased was a native of Kansas, and had been in the United States for several years. He was a highly respected and efficient employee of the Utah Central Railway company, and was well known to all who knew him. He was a member of the Danish Lutheran church, and was a devout and pious man.

At the time mentioned he was on his way home from the northwestern part of the city, and as he was passing the Deseret Woolen Mills, his horse, a large, high-bred animal, took fright at the mill wheel and dashed northward on Second Street at a terrific rate of speed.

Mr. James turned back at the time for a distance of three blocks without stopping, and the investigation of his partner, William Williams, who alleges that he was making preparations to leave the city, revealed the fact that he was on his way home from the northwestern part of the city, and as he was passing the Deseret Woolen Mills, his horse, a large, high-bred animal, took fright at the mill wheel and dashed northward on Second Street at a terrific rate of speed.
