

A TAME LEOPARD.

Washed With Water in His Bath About the Head of the Matter.

Of all the cat tribe, leopards are the most to tame and teach. If they are captured while young. When they are old, their savage habits have become hard, and it is almost impossible for them to tame them.

Thirty years ago, a curious and well known sight on the streets of Berlin was to see a young man, a few years old, a young man, for several years a German child in Berlin. While there, an Arab friend presented him with a young leopard. It was only a few days old, its eyes not open yet. The young man determined to make a pet of the leopard and train him to be a dog.

The leopard was never tamed in a cage, but was always allowed full liberty and was well fed and petted. He slept in a comfortable rug in his master's room, and if the master would cry upon his master's bed and should it with him. Through the city, indoors and out, he followed him. The Arab friend told him a faithful dog and displayed a man's affection for his master.

He grew by and by into a handsome creature, one of the largest of his species and finely marked. When he had been in Berlin for several years, he was about two years old. The Arab was recalled to Berlin and took the animal back with him. In Berlin the leopard occupied the same place in his master's house that he had done before and followed the Arab through the streets in the same way.

At first the sight of the creature walking solemnly along beside his master caused quite a sensation in the city and people crowded to see him pass. That it grew to be an everyday matter, which only attracted occasional notice from strangers who were not used to the animal.

The animal lived to be about 15 years old and died much lamented by all who knew it. His story seems to prove that the wildness of such animals is only slightly inherited, and that their behavior may usually be brought out by proper treatment. — Our Animal Friends.

As a Curing Food.

Bedford Kipling told a fountain admirer not long ago that London society was something which not only palled but quickly disgusted him. Now that he has given his heart to the cause of the underdog, he is a different man.

Cooked Food.

Cooked food should be eaten moderately warm, not hot. The high temperature injures the mucous lining of the whole digestive apparatus, and by increasing the flow of gastric juice, renders the skin more susceptible to chills and colds.

You think it is because your child is "growing too fast" that he fails to put on flesh.

More often it is due to a gradual and general weakening of all the forces of the body. The child may have no pain, may have a fair appetite and yet lose flesh. Perhaps the happiest effects of Scott's Emulsion are in such cases as these. It gives the body a fat which is easily taken up; alters unhealthy action and supplies the best blood-making food known to medical science.
