New York.—Spencer, counsel for the defence, in speaking his speech, took the ground that McFarland was insane long before killing Richardson, being driven mad by continued wrongs and impoverished by a legal fight for the possession of his children and maddened by the publication of Richard-four of the first U. S. artillery, and two son's card, announcing his intention to marry his wife. Not satisfied with her ruin, he must advertise his victim. The counsel followed the whole history of the case minutely to the death-bed marriage of Richardson and Mrs. Mc-farland, animadverting severely on the conduct of the participants in that ceremony, particularly that of Frothingham, the officiating elergyman, and he closed with an elequent appeal to the jury for the acquittal of the prisoner.
