It is with a feeling akin to alarm that many of the English papers witness the exodus from their shores of so large a number of emigrants this season. In one single week, recently, no less than about 7,800 persons left the port of Liverpool alone for Ameriare alarmed at the departure of such large charged to the account of registered numbers of people; for it is said to be doubtful whether this emigration touches the classes who are supposed to need it most. They are neither agricultural laborers nor paupers who are thronging to Liverpool to find a passage across the West-count of the sinking fund, subject to class and not miss them, except to feel relieved at their departure, but the majority of the passengers which leave for the West sre from the great cities and manufacturing towns. They are from the classes upon which England is dependent for much of her greatness and the pre-eminence in manufactures which she has so long maintained, and their exodus fore-shadows the $100,000, to be invested as a permanent transfer of power and the supremacy of commerce to the West.

Men have not been wanting to foretell that some day English laborers would find the way the Irish peasantry found to prosperity and independence, and when they did so an exodus would begin; but they were looked upon as prophets of evil. Now were looked upon as prophets of evil. Now has been reduced about 6,000,000 since that the people are flocking to Liverpool in the 1st of July, by the withdrawal of such crowds with their faces looking towards the West, those who formerly derided these predictions begin to have faith in hem and think it would be infinitely to the advantage of the country to find some means of holding out inducements to thes migrants to remain at home.

INTENSE excitement has lately prevailed at Wheaton, Du Page County, Illinois, over the trial of a man named Chauncey Bailey for the killing of James L. Laird, the paramour of his wife. From the evidence it appears that a friend of Bailey's crated; opposed to any appropriations for the payment of interest on the pubcil, in which he warns them of the respecting his wife's infidelity, and he took taxation; denouncing the proposed paymors. He found Laird and his wife in a the necessary steps to satisfy himself reroom together, and bursting open the door denouncing a high protective tariff tions of church property and other as discriminating in favor of New Engbeen committed. He shot Laird, and then gave himself up. A note written by Mrs. Bailey to Laird, stating when she would meet him, was found upon his person after his death. The trial lasted eleven days and excited great interest, the popular feeling being evidently in favor of the acquittal of the prisoner. But able counsel were on the side of the presecution, and they exerted themselves to secure a conviction. By the fence the jury were urged to recollect that their verdiet would constitute a precedentthat millions of their fellow-countrymen were anticipating their verdict, that it was for them to determine whether the foul adulterer, trampling upon the dearest rights of his fellow-men; obtruding his unclean presence into the family of his neighbor, was to be the object of protection at the hands of juries, or whether the man who appropriately resented the crime by killing the un the paramous of his wife was to be looked fallen. upon as a man among men. The jury refired at 7 p.m., and did not succeed in uniting upon a verdict until between 7 and 8 o'clock the next morning. They then came into Court with the verdict, "Not Guilty-justified by insanity." If this form of insanity were more wide-spread, the crime of adultery would not, probably, be so wide-spread. The verdict was received with much cheering. -
