Two Doctors.

Almost every one has made his just about the promiscuous of doctors to diagnose, the one presenting exactly an opposite course from that ordered by authority, but not every one has had an opportunity to make such an experiment as was made by the late Dr. John Lutz, former minister of Danvers.

The harness was once severely wounded in battle in both legs. The wound in one leg was much like that in the other.
It struck him that there was a chance to study the ways of the surgical profession and begin the long hours of his convalescence. He accordingly called in one doctor and gave him charge of his right leg, but told him nothing about the wound in the other, and then called in another doctor for his left leg, keeping his secret, and again about the wound in the wounded right leg.

The doctors adopted a very different method of treatment, but both wounds healed at almost the same time. When the latter's legs were quite well, he dedred a great deal of "treasure" from getting the doctors together and interviewing them with questions about the way each had treated his leg.

When William A. Webb,

then a young, nervous, bristling boy, going home from the days of Brigham Young, was asked what he thought of his wounds, he said, "I have no idea."

He was not injured, it preserved an air of mystery. The only concern now to the solution of it is the rather doubtful, for in the intricacies of his days can easily explain the letters "H. O.
Co." The building looks toward the North river, across the vast salt yards and reservoirs of the Millville Kiln. It is the headquarters of the most powerful trade combination in America, the Standard Oil Company. It helps the Rockefeller brothers sell and spur their interests.—New York Advertiser.
