In a report of a cricket match an English paper beautifully observes: "The wounds and blows were fortunately not sufficiently serious to place any batter hors du combat, although one batsman was caught out after having received a severe abdominal concussion, a partial contusion of the upper arm, and a splint-ing dental cicatrics through the tongue, the last resulting from a quick-rising ball striking him on the chin while he was nervously confronting the threatsquabbles. Suddenly they changed their mode of life, and were as complete patterns of conjugal felicity as they had formerly been of discord. A neighbor, anxious to know the cause of such sudden conversion, asked the good wife to explain it. She replied: "Me and the old man have got on well enough to-gether since we kept two hears in the house." "Two bears!" was the astonished reply. Yes, sir," said the old lady: "bear, and forbear."

London, 22 .- On Wednesday evening word reached Londonderry that the Cambria, of the Anchor line, had been wrecked on the coast of Donegal. Information was brought to that city by the only survivor, John McGartland, steerage passenger. The intelligence was at first disbelieved, but is since con-firmed. The following is a summary of McGartland's narrative: The voyage Suddenly, when all was apparently going well, she struck on Mistraline island, ten miles west of Donegal and thirty west of Londonderry. The vessel instantly began to fill, through large holes stove in the bottom, and the fires were soon extinguished. It became evident that the steamer was hopelessly lost, and efforts were directed to save the lives of the passengers, who were massed upon the deck. Four boats, crowded with passengers, were launched and put off from the sinking steamer. GROCERY DEPARTMENT saw no more of theship or of the other boats. He thinks there is no doubt all the boats were swamped, and that he had righted. He succeeded in getting in the boat a second time, and found the dead body of a lady dressed in black siik. Mr. McGarlland was tossed about
