PICTURESQUE SHEPHERDESS HAT.

The shepherdess shape is so generally becoming that it reappears regularly in the milliners' parlors as one of the standard shapes. This one is made of fancy pink straw. The brim is draped with cream colored lace. Bunches of tiny blush roses encircle the broad, low crown. A wide bandeau covered with black velvet tilts the hat gracefully from the face. At the left side, a smart little cluster of the roses trim the band and rest on the hair.

IN WOMAN'S WORLD.

A charming innovation in table lights, says a popular writer on home decoration, is the small cluster of flowers made of delicately tinted glass, a tiny electric light bulb being concealed in the center of the flower. The flower rests on a little pedestal in which the battery is concealed, a few leaves or ferns completely hiding it. The lights will burn several hours, and the battery may be replaced at small cost. While not quite as soft as candle light, the little electric lights are very pretty and dainty.

Nothing will ever take the place of tall candlesticks in which shaded candles burn. The extent to which they are used, even at home dinners, is surprising. After all, why should the pretty table be kept for company? The effect of a perfectly served meal on the table manners of the growing boy is salutary. Avoid paper shades, as a rule. There are several excellent flame-proof shades to be had for very little, while the pierced silver and brass shades, though rather expensive, have such lasting qualities that it certainly pays to invest in them.

Comparatively few street gowns and shirtwaist suits have yet appeared. It seems settled that shepherdess checks are to be favorites for coat and skirt suits. They are perennially satisfactory, and every one is glad when their vogue, which never disappears entire, increases. Oddly enough, the authorities announce that checked silk for shirtwaist suits have also their day. Polka dots and pin dots are also passe. The new shirtwaist suit will be made of taffeta, louisine, pongee, and novelty silks. Foulards are by no means barred, but they must be in one of the new patterns. Some of the new soft-finished taffetas are very satisfactory for shirtwaist suits. If the summer is, as predicted, a very warm one, this material may prove to be somewhat oppressive.

Several pretty pongee simple gowns were seen at an exclusive dressmaker's.
