

VANCE IS GUILTY OF WIFE MURDER

Verdict Returned After Eighty
Minutes of Deliberation

FOREMAN MAKES STATEMENT

Declares Prisoner Hanged Himself—
Convicted Man Says He Did Not Get Fair Deal.

That Thomas Vance murdered his wife, the mother of his children, was the verdict of a jury that for a week had listened to the testimony for and against the accused. The result of the jury's deliberations was announced in court about 3:40 o'clock, one hour and 20 minutes after the verdict had been received after the jury had retired with the fate of a human being entrusted to their judgment.

It was the general opinion in the court room that the jury would not be long. Friends of the prisoner believed that a verdict of acquittal would be forthcoming, or that the least acquittal of the charges against him by Judge Armstrong, eight in number, would be sustained. On the other hand, the state's attorneys and others expected that it would not require very long for the jury to arrive at a conclusion that Vance was guilty of murder in the first degree, as charged. Nearly every one who was present when the jury retired remained until they made their reappearance.

THE VERDICT.

From the moment that the jury entered the box there was a hush in the room. "Have you arrived at a decision?" asked Judge Armstrong. Foreman Latzette, Hanchett, replied: "We have," and passed a slip of paper to Judge Armstrong. The latter scanned it hastily and handed it to Clerk Howard King, who read as follows: "We the jurors in the above entitled action find the accused guilty of murder in the first degree."

The announcement perhaps affected no one in the court room less than Vance himself, at least so far as outward appearance was concerned. He was much less moved by the words that sealed his doom than he was earlier in the day when his weak physical condition was described resulting from a year's confinement in jail, as portrayed by Judge Maginnis in his argument to the jury.

A PECULIAR CASE.

Perhaps never before in the history of criminal justice in the state has public opinion been at such variance as that occasioned by the verdict in this case. The general sentiment is and has been that Vance is a man of vicious and intemperate temper, and there has existed little doubt that his wife was the object of inhuman treatment at his hands. Yet there were doubts in the minds of many as to whether he poisoned his wife. That he was deserving of severe punishment was conceded by the majority of people who have followed the case. Judge Maginnis, in an impassioned plea for his client's life, said he had no sympathy for a wife beater at any time. He said also that Vance is a man of vicious temper and of but little intelligence.

Seldom also has a jury felt called upon to justify the verdict almost as soon as returned as was the case in this instance. Scarcely had they left the courtroom and while they were still in the building, they were criticized by the friends of Vance for the verdict rendered.

WOMAN QUESTIONS JURORS.

Mrs. A. B. Vance, of Ogden, a sister-in-law to Thomas Vance, asked the jurymen how it was possible that they could have returned such a verdict. She declared that they were going to execute an innocent man, and that the time would come when they would see their error.

The jury felt compelled to make a statement, and speaking for himself and colleagues, Mr. Hanchett told Mrs. Vance in effect that Vance had hanged himself. Personally, explained Mr. Hanchett, he was in doubt whether the accused was guilty of murder in the first degree until Vance took the stand in his own behalf, but he was convinced that the man was guilty 10 minutes after he began to testify. This same view, said Mr. Hanchett, was taken by the other jurors, and the 80 minutes in the jury room was taken up not in deciding Vance's guilt, but in determining the exact degree.

"NOT A FAIR DEAL."

Vance had but little to say concerning the verdict, further than that he was disappointed and that he was innocent of the crime. He said that he declared that he had not had a fair deal from Judge and jury but said that his attorneys had perhaps done as much for him as they possibly could.

Judge Armstrong announced that the sentence would be pronounced upon Vance Thursday, Dec. 3, at 10 o'clock. Judge Maginnis announced that he would take the case to the next session of the court in this direction is likely to be taken when Vance appears for sentence.

HISTORY OF CRIME.

Just one year from the day that Mrs. Mary Vance was taken to St. Mark's hospital in a critical condition from the effects of a beating received from her husband, Thomas Vance, and from poison alleged to have been administered by him, the latter was found guilty of murdering her. The beating took place on Nov. 26, 1907, and resulted from no other cause than that Mrs. Vance poured tea into the coffee into the cup of her husband at the midday meal. After knocking her down and kicking her into semi-consciousness, Vance finished his meal, smoked his pipe and departed. The remainder of the day Mrs. Vance was ill from the treatment accorded her and next day was worse. While lying down on the day last named Vance entered the room, and in a dying statement the wife declared that she believed he put poison into a glass that stood by her head, drank of the water and soon after he left the room, and immediately became very ill. She continued to grow worse until Dec. 8, when she died at St. Mark's hospital.

VICTIM'S SISTER TESTIFIES.

Mrs. Amanda Vance, a sister of the dead woman, and a niece by marriage of Thomas Vance, was one of the principals in the prosecution of Thomas Vance from start to finish. A witness whose testimony went farther, perhaps, to convict the accused man was his own daughter, Lena, aged 12 years, who was called to take the stand against her father, the children testified at the preliminary hearing, telling like stories of the treatment their mother received from their father. The two younger children, however, were not witnesses in the trial of the case. It was with reluctance that the state put the eldest child upon the stand. An aged Syrian woman, who called at the Vance home as a peddler also witnessed the brutality of Vance and testified against him. Mrs. Calderwood and Kerr, who performed an autopsy on the body of Mrs. Vance, testified that there were evidences of poisoning and that bruises were found on the body.

The contention of the defense was that if Mrs. Vance had been poisoned, the fatal dose was administered by her own hand with sugar and milk. She testified that his wife had threatened suicide, but when it was known to him that she was suffering from supposed poison on Nov. 27, 1907, he said nothing of threats made by her and did not attempt to help save her life.

A sad case of destitution caused by the dishonesty of a family which left the city recently, was discovered Saturday evening when neighbors reported to officials of the Salvation Army that Mrs. Cox, of 67 Grand street, and her family had disappeared with food and needed clothing and fuel. The case was investigated and the family was found to have left the city. The wife and articles of clothing to the poor widow and her daughter.

ANDREW NELSON NOW A FREE MAN

Indictment Against Him in Bank
Robbery Case Is Dismissed.

MAY ENTER STATE COURTS.

He Says He Is Not Satisfied and Will Be Glad to Have Matter
Come to Trial.

Andrew W. Nelson is free upon the streets in Salt Lake today, not by the sufferance of bondsmen, but with no restrictions upon him, and the indictment brought against him by the federal grand jury after a record-breaking investigation into the Utah National bank robbery of last January, has been formally dismissed. The only possibility of continuing the case now lays with the state courts, and in the probability that County Attorney Hansen will take action.

In the federal courts a peculiar situation arose and the same situation will transfer itself to the state courts, with the assurance that an expensive trial will be necessary to duplicate the evidence on which the federal jury brought in an indictment.

This is because the one bit of evidence, considered as "clinching" in connection with the general mass of circumstances and probabilities surrounding the case was connected with the authorship of a letter to W. F. Adams from Ogden. To establish the authorship of this letter it would be necessary to summon the expert Kitka from San Francisco, and it is understood that he is holding out for a big fee. Before the grand jury, Kitka established a reputation as an expert by his work on the handwriting of the jurors themselves, and on many samples of writing submitted. Then he took the Ogden letter, which had been written before it was known that a robbery had occurred, except to the guilty parties and those they had informed of, it dissected the handwriting in a way that made the jurors share his conviction as to its authorship.

NELSON DESIRES TRIAL.

It is known that the Kitka matter was one of the things submitted to Washington at the time the decision was rendered declaring that the "permission" given young Nelson to enter the bank out of hours, and to carry a key to it, did not constitute "agency," but was mere permission. Kitka's employment meant a large fee of the "special witness" variety, and the government was willing to expend money on such a slender hold as it seemed to have on the defendant.

Andrew W. Nelson, in speaking of the dismissing of the indictment says: "I am not satisfied with this dismissal as a vindication. I am anxious to have my case brought in the state courts."

County Attorney Willard Hansen takes the view of the case that it will be necessary to have a complaint in his office from some one of the interested parties before proceeding with the issuance of a complaint, and that as soon as such a complaint is filed will proceed with the complaint, and will request from the U. S. district attorney a transcript of the federal court's evidence.

LONDONER LOCATES HERE.

Detective N. J. Londoner, who was in charge of the Pinkerton investigation which extended over the entire spring and summer and who has been connected with theatrical enterprises since the indictment was brought, announces the opening of a detective agency here simultaneously with the dismissing of the indictment in the federal court. The title of the new agency is the "Londoner National Detective Agency." Prior to the bank case he had worked here often in connection with irregularities in bars and under the protection of the American Bankers' association. At the time the robbery occurred he was at work here trading what was thought to be a case of issuing bogus clearing-house certificates in imitation of the "emergency currency" of last winter's panic.

ELDER DIES IN CHICAGO.

Oliver A. Hansen Succumbs to Leakage of the Heart.

Oliver A. Hansen, son of Peter M. and Anna Anderson Hansen of Bear River, Boxelder county, Utah, died in a Chicago hospital yesterday afternoon, supposedly from leakage of the heart. Elder Hansen was returning from a mission to Scandinavia where his physical condition alarmed the officers of the mission with the result that his return to his home was deemed advisable. After a somewhat long passage on the steamship Republic from Europe to the United States his condition seemed to grow worse and he was taken to one of the best hospitals in Chicago. All possible attention was bestowed upon him, but without avail.

Elder Hansen was born in Bear River City, Oct. 28, 1886. He was set apart for his mission Nov. 28, 1907. His body left Chicago for his home this afternoon, and will arrive here Wednesday or Thursday.

UNEMPLOYED MEN ARE GROWING IN NUMBER

Salvation Army and Volunteer Officers Say Not So Many as Last Year Though.

How close will outdoor work shut down this winter, to await the opening of spring?

The question is an important one to every center about which gather unemployed men for the 10 cent bed and the five cent meal, which is one step removed from total want. So far, the heavy weather has not occasioned in Salt Lake any gathering of unemployed in such numbers, that the demand for men cannot keep pace with the influx of supply.

At the Salvation Army hotel this morning the "sitting room" was full of men "waiting for something to do," but staff Captain Soderholm feared the assurance that he had work enough for all, and it was merely an ordinary day's gathering of men between one job and another.

As the Salvation Army hotel is one of the best thermometers of the local labor situation, Staff Capt. Soderholm was questioned as to the relative number of unemployed this year and last at this time.

"We have little to fear this winter," he said, "except from heavy snows and unprecedented cold weather. Only the absolute closing down of all outdoor work can throw an influx of labor into Salt Lake, looking for a refuge from the cold. Some such people we always have, but there are fewer of them this winter than last, by many hundreds."

"I do not need yet to issue a general appeal for citizens to offer shelter and food to the unemployed, as they can about their own places of business and their homes. The natural demands of the situation are enough to cover the situation."

The ten cent beds of the hotel, with the free bath and clothes fumigation included, are patronized to their limit, and since the Thanksgiving storm a few men have sat up all night in the free reading room.

At the Volunteer hotel on east First South street, the situation is as well covered, as at the Salvation Army headquarters. Their beds are well filled, but not crowded past capacity as yet. The Volunteers intend to furnish a Christmas dinner to poor families, following the activity of the Salvation Army in furnishing a Thanksgiving repast. The collection of material for the Volunteer Christmas dinner begins today.
