The meeting of the Privy Council to-day was the most protracted held by that body since the Fenian scare in 1867; the Lord Lieutenant presided. It was resolved to proclaim the worst districts under the operation of the curfew section of the Repression Act, which authorizes the police to arrest all suspicious persons found on the streets between an hour after sunset and an hour before sunrise. A proclamation was also agreed to offering a reward of £5,000 for information leading to the apprehension and conviction of Field's assailants, with the usual provisions of pardon and protection to informers.

It was impossible, the Empress said, to foresee what the end would be. Von Puttkamer said at the close of the sitting he would ask the Emperor if he thought it necessary (he Von Puttkamer) should proceed to the scene of danger.

Losses by this decline fall heavily on innocent holders, and many may lose their all. The causes attributed for this decline are numerous. The immediate one was undoubtedly the Northern Pacific Railway Company's circular, issued in England, offering 3,000,000 acres good land at a low price and easy terms. The Canadian Northwest Land Company was formed only last summer, with a capital of £3,000,000 for the purpose of buying 5,000,000 of land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Among the directors were the Duke of Manchester, Lord Elphinstone, Sir George Warrenden and Sir Rowland Blannerhasset.
