The Bible had a hard time. But it has emerged into a new day. It owes much to the scientific critic, for it has come from under the scalpel and microscope as infinite in its message and on its human side, bearing a new authority in the resetiled faith of the majority of its closest students and its most scienti-fic critics. I think that one of the great gifts of our time has been that coming from the hands of the critical scientists They have compelled the Christian church into an appreciation that the gerous part of the train-thet the pas-sengers who would not to rate such nessage of the intellect is found in the

"Perhaps the most significant in its bearing on the history of Palestine and the Jews was the discovery of the Tel-el-Amama, for it was the beginning of those discoveries which have shown that the Mosaic age was almost as literary as our own. Canaan was the cen-ter of a correspondence which reached from one end to another of the civilized from one end to another of the civilized world. The tablets were discovered while the grave of the scribe of Ameno-phis the Fourth was being searched for treasures.' A number of clay biscuits were found instead of papyri and these were covered with Babylonian mark-lings. These, when translated were shown to be letters written by King Amenophis in whinch he discussed af-fairs pertaining to county and state. That was the beginning of the new light. We now know that when Abra-ham reached Canaan he found the same law and sume literature and he realized law and same literature and he realized that he had moved to another part of wheel horses of the local newspaper forces for many years past, now ap-pears to be comfortably located to another part of but are history. We now known that battles but are history. We now known the when Machpelah was bought for a grave the translation was carried out in accordance with the Babylonian law LETTERS OF ABRAHAM. "Letters written during the period of Abraham have been found to be those of the common people, in which trivial affairs were recorded. They do away with the claim that this age had neither writing nor reading. The unfailing testimony of the discoveries is to the fi-delity of the pictures and customs in the records of the Bible. The latest evithoughtful, while the bound volume as ever is little used except by the student. "Finally the ideal of worship is pres-ent in every democracy that is any-thing more than a painted sham. No democracy cas last without faith. Its fundamental faith must be that there is such a thing as righteousness made plain in the many voices of truth. It dence, too, goes to prove beyond ques-tion the truth of the race's civilization in the Euphrates valley. Discoveries made show that the Babylonian litera-ture had a widespread influence. The ode of Hammurabi is the oldest de of law in the world. Its discovery code oldest is more important than that of the Tel el-Amama tablets. D. E. Morgan made the discovery of the Hammurabic code the in 1892, and when the tablets bearing the code were translated it was found that law had existed thousands of years
