

About a fortnight afterward, I saw a Richmond newspaper at the camp at Falmouth, in which were detailed the circumstances of the death of Stonewall Jackson. These left no doubt in my mind that the person I had seen lying on the ground was that officer, and that his singular prediction, mentioned previously, had been verified. The following is an extract from the newspaper account:

"General Jackson, having gone some distance in front of his line on Saturday evening, was returning about 8 o'clock, in the darkness, mistaken for a body of the enemy's cavalry, and fired on by a regiment of his own troops."

Then, after detailing what took place after the General fell from his horse, the account proceeds:

"The trumpets were utterly deserted, with the exception of Captains Willbourn and Wynn; but in the skirting of the thicket on the left, some person was observed by the side of the wood, sitting on his horse motionless and silent. This unknown individual was clad in a dark dress, which strongly resembled the Federal uniform; but it seemed impossible that he could have penetrated to that spot without being discovered, and what followed seemed to prove that he belonged to the Confederates. Captain Willbourn directed him to ride up there and see what troops these were—the men who fired on Jackson—and the stranger rode slowly in the direction pointed out, but never returned with any answer. Who this silent personage was is left to posterity."
