CREMATION.

of the dead to askes with fire is not by Unrist, and to a limited extent was and Is still the custom in a more crude and incomplete way in India, the funeral pure dating back to the very beginning matter of completeness, incineration or as nearly that as possible, having taken place with each burning, while with the latter the bodies are and were merely singed and then thrown into a neighboring stream to be devoured by rishes. The revival of the practice in civilized times and places, while free from most of the repugnant features of the old systems, has not extricated it from the chief objections-the fact that it is opposed to the precepts of the Bible and is violently shocking to the cultivated and soulful mind. Some time since a project was set on foot looking to the erection of a crematory on a large scale in the State of New York. Supscription lists were at once opened, but so decidedly was the drift of public sentiment against the enterprise that great difficulty was experienced in making the elements cohere at all. The projectors, however, pushed the work wherever there was an opportunity of getthat a convert or a dollar, and at last succeeded in getting to gether enough subscribers and funds to proceed with the necessary building. A suitable site was secured at Fresh Pend, Long Island, and the walls were erected to the square; but no sooner had this been accomplished than a tremendous wind storm arose and blew the structure to the ground. Having gone so far, the stockholders decided to try it again, and after another strain on their resources, and difficulties of various kinds, succeeded at last in completing the work and formally announcing the establishment open for the reception of "business." In the absence of another wind storm or some other visitation of the elcorpses were incinerated in one day. The inducements offered by the stockholders are cheapness, despatch and health to the survivors, arguments which appeal strongly to a certain limited but rapidly growing element-and thus is one of the most sacred duties of the living, that of disposing properly of the remains of the dead, converted into a matter of speculation and con-That cremation is growing rapidly in public estimation cannot be denied; that it is through a sordid and perverted condition of our race that it is able to do so, is unquestionable. In this day of enlightenment as to the will of God and the duties of man, the mere advocacy of it sounds too much like sacrliege to be tolerated by s Christian: and the revolt which s sensitive mind must experience at the very thought of the remains of some loved one undergoing such a process is of itself a barrier to the practice becoming universally adopted "Earth to earth and dust to dust" is the decree of the Creator, and as we are of the earth we should be permitted to return to its breast and be held in its embrace when the spirit which for a time was of and with it has taken its dignt. To circumvent the process of decay ordained by Him who gave the means by which a blade of grass or a giant tree should spring from the remains of their predecessors beneath the soll, is implous in the extreme, and should receive no countenauce, but rather the sternest fand most uncompromising opposition from all who claim to be Christians.

There was one cremation in Salt Lake thity some six or seven years ago -that of Dr. Winslow. Those who witnessed that disquesting spectacle seemed to have no further desire to gratify their curlosity or satisfy their thirst for fuformation. We hope it was the last as well as the first instance of the klad in our Territory. We do not say cremation must go, but that it must not be permitted to come.

The complete subjugation of the cause of righteonsness and exemplification of God's will is all that will satisfy theadversary, and we were well aware of it a long time ago-no thanks to those who are conducting the raid against us, however. Our only answer is, Do your worst; do all that our Father will permit you to; and then, as now, we have no concessions to make, no terms to offer.

Instances of hirsute growth upon a corpse after its interment have been published more than once, but a case of this kind recently related by the Baltimore American is about the most remarkable we ever heard of. Following is the account of it: "Two years ago Wm. A. Walters was buried in the Stone Chapel Cemetery, in Woodcock Pre-emption, Timber Culture or Des Valley, Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania. The other day the body was exhumed to be taken by friends of the deceased to Williamsport for reinterment. When the coffin was reached by diggers they discovered that it had sprung at the joints, and out of the crevices the hair on the skull protruded in all directions. On opening casket the hair on the head was found to measure eigh teen inches, the whiskers eight inches, and the growth on the breast six inches, notwithstanding the body had been cleanly shaved when prepared for burial. A similar instance occurred In 1882 at the Cassville cemetery fifteen miles from McConnellstown Pa. Upon exhuming the remains of Jocob Cresswell, the skeleton, which had been buried for ten years, had hair on it ten or twelve inches in length and as firm as during life. It is claimed in London that ar

American inventor has constructed instruments which will enable an Atlantic cable to be utilized for telephonic purposes. One of the cable companies has interested itself in the inventor's work and entered into an agreement with him for the sole right to use the telephone. It was found that telephoning could be conducted at a distance of over 800 miles under water; the instrument used in this experiment was then doubled in power, with the result that conversation was carried on size of this, and it is estimated that i will convey the sound of the voice fully 4,000 miles, making all due allowance for supmersion in salt water, by arranging beforehand a programme for | which process all the experiments the officials to tollow, and then by have been carried on in the Gulf of means of threats, calumniation and Mexico.
