MRS. STEWART EXPLAINS. In explanation of the incident, Mrs. Stewart said that for two hours she had been sitting in the chilly hall-may, when to rest herself she had walked for a few minutes in the hall and was leaning against the railing when approached by the deputy sher. iff. She had had no intention, she said of listening to what was going on within, and had in fact not heard a gingle word. Her statement was so satisfactory to the state that counsel windrew objection, and Mrs. Stewart was nermitted to testify. was permitted to testify.

AMUSEMENTS.

Theater-A merry conglomeration of nonsense is "Marrying Mary," and the big audience which witnessed it last night voted it one of the laughing sucnight voted it one of the taking sec-cesses of the season. Analytically con-sidered, it is easy to see why Mr. Royle should call back the play, after it had been sent out under the name of "My Wife's Husbands," and to decide to make it the theme of a musical come-dy. Standing alone, without the assist-ore of music damping and the clever dy. Standing alone, without the assist-ance of music, dancing, and the clever specialty turns which now form a part of it, if may well be doubted whether it would have enjoyed a very extended or a very prosperous career; but fur-nishing the libretto of a rattling musical faree comedy and especially with such farce comedy, and especially with such people as Miss Cahill, Eugene Cowles, and others to interpret the principal roles, the piece in its new shape and under its new name, "Marrying Mary," becomes a whirlwind of color, laughter and amusement. Miss Cahill, who has long enjoyed Miss Camit, who has long enjoyed fame in the cast as a delineator of hu-morous roles, is decidedly original, sug-gestive at times alike of May Irwin, Marie Dressler and Lillian Russell; with her fetching gowns, her lively coneption of the burlesque, and her ability to sing popular songs, and more than all with her ribbon counter episode, she captivated her audience, even though it
