The Successes of the Japanese Army and Navy Have Been Marked by Great Public Demonstrations—People Trodden to Death in the Excitement—The Spirit of "Conquer or Die."

Special Correspondence.
TOKYO, May 10.—The successes that have been achieved recently by the Japanese army and navy, have been marked by public demonstrations in this and other cities of the Orient. Sunday evening, the 8th inst., the people took part in a lantern procession, organized by the metropolitan press, on behalf of the Tokyo citizens, in celebration of the military and naval victories. It was a great event, no less than 100,000 people being in the parade. The day being signified by the arrival of reports that the Japanese army had taken and were occupying Feng Hwang Cheng and Fu Lan Tien, and that the fleet, under command of Admiral Togo, had at last succeeded in bottling up Port Arthur, the Tokyoites heartily responded to the call of the press to participate in the celebration of the victories, and flowed into Hibuya park from every quarter of the city. At dusk the spacious grounds of the park were an expansive sea of lanterns and flags, many of the lanterns being beautifully decorated. At 7 o'clock a bomb was exploded, the imperial band struck up a military march and the people, with their lanterns, began to flow out of the park, threading their way through the principal streets, which were crowded with spectators, and which continually resounded with the shouts of "Banzaï" ("Long live the emperor.") The houses all along the line of march were beautifully illuminated with lanterns and artistically decorated with flags.

A SAD CATASTROPHE.
 Thus the procession surged up to the Babasaki gate—the outer east gate leading to the emperor's palace—where an accident of a most dreadful nature occurred. The bridge, leading to the gate across the moat, and the gate itself were too narrow for the large column of the procession. When the latter was passing over the bridge, the balustrade broke down and at the gate men, women and children were having the life crushed out of them. After great difficulty some 2,000 of the lantern bearers entered the palace grounds and tens of thousands more were pressing onward, when an accident, in which a few persons were injured, occurred, and the policemen on duty shut the gate. This fact was known only to the few who were immediately against the gate and the procession in the rear pressed onward and onward. Those in front of the gate shrieked and struggled for life, but the force that pressed onward was too strong for them, and all those between the gate and bridge were in death's agony. Their shrieks for help were drowned by the frenzied shouts of "Banzaï." The column swayed to and fro and many people who stumbled and fell were trodden to death. Some fell into the moat, most of them being saved. At last the gate was opened and there was a rush, causing many to fall who were trampled under foot. No less than 20 lives were lost, and in addition, many persons were injured.

AT FEVER HEAT.
 The enthusiasm shown by the people at large over the present war, such that the authorities have been flooded with applications for service at the front. Not to speak of reservists and lads under age entreating to be enrolled on the active list, even old men, presumably of the time honored "Samurai" class, have offered to join the army with their long-forgotten swords. But the most novel and latest applicant is one Kensuke Matsumoto, who has forwarded to the military authorities an application for immediate service written in his own blood.

JAPS ARE SECRETIVE.
 It is next to impossible to learn anything officially respecting the war. A spirit of secrecy seems to pervade the whole atmosphere here. By reading one day's issue of the Desert News we learn more of the movements of the troops and what is expected to happen, than by reading one week's issue of the local papers. No one, except those who are at the head of affairs, has any idea of the number of troops that have gone to the front; and as to the engagements which have taken place, with the exception of the destruction of the "Kinshu Maru," only those showing victories for this country have been published. There may be a surprise in this. The spirit of "conquer or die" is so strong and the government appreciating the excitable temperament of its people, is afraid to issue news of fatalities for fear of causing an exodus to the front. When the news of the sinking of the steamer Kinshu Maru reached the city, the natives were up in arms in a minute. They felt that defeat was staring them in the face and they were ready to fight at a moment's notice. The Japanese has a pride in becoming a soldier and if he fails to pass the physical test, he feels that he is unfit to live. We have heard of many instances where he has committed "harakiri"— disembowled himself—the means usually employed by the natives when taking their own lives. The "Yamato-damashi"—"spirit of Japan"—is exceedingly strong. There is no doubting a Japanese patriotism and love of country. He will make any sacrifice and gladly forfeit his life, if needs be, to save his country.

THE MISSION WORK.
 Referring to our work, will say: We are working hard, employing every means possible to interest the people in our message, but so far have not met with very great success. The nation as a whole is not religiously inclined. The doctrine of ethics taught in Buddhism and Shinto seems to satisfy the people inasmuch as they are not restrained in their indulgence. The mythical hope of spending their future life floating through the air riding in a lotus blossom seems to be the height of their ambition. Until recently we have met with but little opposition from the priests of these sects, but since the outbreak of war a systematic crusade has been begun against Christianity. The priests are going from place to place delivering lectures in the streets, in the homes of the people and in the temples, teaching the people that to accept Christianity is to become a Russian and a traitor to their country. They are also preaching against the Bible, using many passages found therein to show the ridiculousness of believing the teachings which it portrays. However, we have not felt any evil effects from their attacks, our meetings are well attended and strict attention is paid to all that we say. Last Sunday we had the privilege of leading the more of the natives into the waters of baptism, one, the wife of the last young man to join the Church here, and the other the daughter of an aged couple who have been regular attendants at our meetings for months past. We have prospects of others becoming associated with us in the near future. The Lord is blessing the Elders in their efforts to overcome the language. We feel that we have many things for which we should be thankful and are very grateful to our heavenly Father for the blessings He is bestowing upon us.

Asthma Sufferers Should Know This.
 Foley's Honey and Tar has cured many cases of asthma that were considered hopeless. Mrs. Adolph Buesing, 21 West Third St., Des Moines, Iowa, writes: "A severe cold contracted twelve years ago was neglected until it finally grew into asthma. The best medicine available could not give me more than temporary relief. Foley's Honey and Tar was recommended and one bottle entirely cured me of asthma which had been growing on me for twelve years, and if I had not taken it at the start I would have been saved years of suffering." F. J. Hill Drug Co.

before he gave the book to poor young Power were these:
 "Farewell, but not forever, brother dear; Be brave and patient on thy bed of sorrow!"
 Mrs. Murphy, when she received the little volume, had the thought to send it to the aged cardinal in Birmingham. An early post brought her the reply reproduced here:
 April 7, 1885.
 Dear Mrs. Murphy—Your letter and its contents took away my breath. I was deeply moved to find that a book of mine had been in Gen. Gordon's hands, and that the description of a soul preparing for death, I send it back to you, with my heartfelt thanks, by this post in registered cover. It is additionally precious, as having Mr. Power's writing in it. Most truly yours,
 JOHN H. CARD NEWMAN.

Another reminiscence, and the briefest, Robert Louis Stevenson, who was then at Bourne-mouth, heard what he calls in a letter lying before me "the pathetic tale of Gordon and Newman." But his added comment is splendidly concise: "How one envied the cardinal!"
 I may recall the fact that the poem was dedicated by Newman to the Rev. John Gordon of the Oratory, Birmingham, who was a brother of the late Rev. William Gordon of the Birmingham Oratory. Both these priests (who were converts) belonged to the Gordons of Kethocksmill, Aberdeen.

Not Sick a Day Since.
 "I was taken severely sick with kidney trouble. I tried all sorts of medicines, none of which relieved me. One day I saw an ad. of your Electric Bitters and determined to try that. After taking a few doses I felt relieved, and soon there after was entirely cured, and have not seen a sick day since. Neighbors of mine have been cured of Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Liver and Kidney troubles and General Debility." This is what B. E. Bass, of Fremont, N. C., writes. Only 50c, at Z. C. M. I. Drug Store.

Many Electrical Accidents in Salt Lake.

In View of Their Frequency it is Interesting to "Know What To Do" at the Right Time—That Knowledge May Save Many Lives—Directions for Treatment of Persons Rendered Insensible.

During the past year or two there have been some very severe electrical accidents, and several deaths in Salt Lake as a direct result of such accidents. In two cases, at least, experts have said that the lives of the victims could have been saved by proper treatment immediately resorted to. But not one person in a thousand "knows just what to do" at the right time. And as that knowledge would be priceless at the "right time," the Desert News reproduces the following directions and cuts just issued by one of the leading electrical concerns of the United States—the General Electric Company of Schenectady, New York:

"In cases of apparent death from an electric shock no time should be lost to induce artificial respiration. The body must be placed upon the back. A roll made of a coat or anything else convenient (rolled, not folded) is placed under the shoulders, and must be sufficiently large to so prop up the spine as to drop the head backwards. The operator, kneeling behind the subject's head, facing him, and grasps the elbows, drawing them well over the head, so as to bring them almost together above it, and holds them there for two or three seconds. See Fig. 1.

Then he carries the elbows down to the sides and front of the chest, firmly compressing the chest by throwing his weight upon the elbows. See Fig. 2.

After two or three seconds the arms are again carried above the head and the same maneuver is repeated, at the rate of fifteen or sixteen times per minute. This manipulation stimulates respiration in the following manner: When the arms are extended over the head, the chest-walls are expanded, just as in inspiration, and if the throat is clear the air will rush into the lungs. When the arms are brought down to the sides of the chest, compressing it, the air is expelled, just as in expiration.

The operator must appreciate the fact that this manipulation must be executed with methodical deliberation just as described, and never hurriedly nor half-heartedly. To grasp the arms and move them rapidly up and down like a pump-handle is both absurd and absolutely useless.

In addition to the above, the tongue must be drawn out to free the throat. An assistant should take the tongue, held by a cloth or handkerchief to prevent slipping, and draw it forcibly out during the act of inspiration or when the arms are extended above the head, and when the chest is compressed it may be allowed to recede. See Fig. 3.

This rhythmical traction upon the tongue is in itself an excellent stimulant of respiration. It acts not only by freeing the throat of the tongue, which may fall back and obstruct breathing, but also by reflex irritation, through the frenum or bridge under the tongue being drawn forcibly against the lower teeth.

Restoration to life by artificial respiration usually requires more than half an hour and the efforts should not be abandoned in less than an hour.

Last Book Gordon Read in Khartoum.

LIKE a good son of St. Philip Neri (friend of Palestrina and founder of the Oratory) that invented the oratorio, Cardinal Newman loved music. He himself played the fiddle, an accomplishment in him as unexpected as his horsemanship or as his winemaking for fastidious dons at Oriel. One of the few events which tempted him in his old age to descend into Birmingham from his solitary peak at Edgbaston was the musical festival, where the old ecclesiastic—looking the image of Emerson in a Roman collar—was easily recognized in the stalls. Little did he then imagine that the library would one day be of his own creating; that an Anglican cathedral would resound to strains of his, and that the king and queen would hear them in the national opera house. The dream of Gerontius has had a triumph far beyond any dream of Newman's.

But at the end of his life the poem had a glory of another kind. A little duodecimo copy of it was bought by Gen. Gordon and was taken by him to Khartoum. Daily he faced death, and the book was his ghostly counselor and congenial friend. At the close of things he gave it to Frank Power, the ill-fated correspondent of the Times, who sent it home to his sister, Mrs. Murphy, in Dublin, telling her at the same time that the deep, incisive pencil marks were Gordon's own. The scored passages carried their own story:

"Pray for me, oh my friends,
 'Tis death—oh! loving friends your prayers—'tis he.
 So pray for me, my friends, who have not strength to pray
 Use well the interval
 Now that the hour has come, my fear is fled!"
